Preface.

It is gratifying to note that the Ahom-Assamese-English Dictionary has after all been completed. The task was a tremendous one for a man of my knowledge and ability. I had to do this work in addition to my own duties, as a Deputy Inspector of Schools. It may, therefore, be easily imagined what amount of extra labour I had to undergo. The ordinary duties of a Deputy Inspector of Schools are multifarious. He can hardly have time enough at his disposal to devote to other work, but as the Administration was pleased to entrust to me the work of the compilation of the Dictionary, in addition to my own duties, I had to take the burden on my shoulder, though it was very heavy. I was given a clerk for six months to assist me in the work. I put him to the collection of words from Ahom manuscripts, which he did as far as practicable within so short a time. I then applied myself to further collection of words in consultation with a few Deodhais who could read Ahom and perform Deopujas. Thus I was able, as far as I can believe, to collect all the available words at the present time. In arranging the words, I have, strictly, followed the Ahom order of alphabets. Each Ahom word in Ahom character has been given first, then the Part of Speech, pronunciation, both in Assamese and English equivalent Shān words where possible, literal meanings of compound words and phrases, and meanings both in Assamese and English in order. I have spared no pains to make the book complete as far as possible. Here I would mention that I have taken help from Dr. Grierson's books entitled "Notes on Ahoms" and "Ahom Cosmogamy." As I have no knowledge of other Tai-languages, I have put down in my book the equivalent Shān words from his books, I am, therefore, greatly indebted to him for this.

In conclusion, I take the opportunity to express my gratefulness to the Honourable P. R. T. Gurdon, C.S.I., I.A., Commissioner, Assam Valley Districts, and the Honourable Rai Bahadur Phani Dhar Chaliha, retired E.A.C., for their kind and valuable advice received from time to time.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE AHOMS AND THEIR LANGUAGE.

It is an established fact that the Ahoms are the descendants of those Shāns who, under the leadership of their king Shukāphā, migrated from Ahoms and their religion. Māolung in the ancient kingdom of Pong, crossed the Patkai mountains and entered the upper part of the Brahmaputra Valley in 1228 A.D. They gradually conquered the whole of the Assam Valley and ruled the country for nearly 600 years. They are genuine Shāns, both in their physical type and their tribal language and written character. They called themselves Tāi (celestial origin), which is the name by which the Shāns still designate themselves, and they maintained a fairly continuous intercourse with the inhabitants of the original home until very recent times. They migrated to Assam before

The Tais were converted to Buddhism. They maintained their old religion and language intact till the reign of Shudāngphā alias Bamunikuar, which commenced in 1397 A.D. This prince was brought up in his childhood at Habung by a Brahmin family. When he was made king, he brought with him the Brahmin family with the image of the Hindu God, Lakhi Narayan, worshipped by them and assigned the idol a place in the inside of the royal palace. Gradually the Hindu religion had an imperceptible hold on the Ahom kings. In 1654 A.D. when Shutamā, alias Jayadhwaj Sinha, became king, he finally accepted Hindu religion and became a disciple of the Auniati Gosain. Thus the decay of Ahom religion commenced, and was complete in the reign of Rudra Singha, although the Deodhais still perform their religious ceremonies according to their old customs.

Language.—Ahom belongs to the same sub-group of the Tai language as Khāmti and Shān. Both of them are now live languages, while the Ahom is a defunct one. It seems that the Ahoms maintained their own language for some time after the conquest of Assam, but their number being comparatively small and having to live, permanently, with people whose number was overwhelming, they neglected their own language and accepted the language of the people they conquered. Besides there is no mention in any history if they had brought with them their wives and children. If they did, the number was very small. They had, therefore, to take to wives women from amongst the conquered tribes. These women were ignorant of the Ahom language, so their husbands found it troublesome to interchange their thoughts with them, such being the case, they were compelled to learn the language of their wives to make themselves comfortable.

The Ahom alphabet is related to those of Khāmti, Shān and Burmese. It possesses signs for g, gh, j, jb, d, dh, b and bh which are wanting in Khāmti and Shān. It has no y, for which sound Khāmti and Shān use the sign which Ahom employs for j.

The following are characters of the Ahom alphabets:—

m	କା	kā	ଲେ	ବା	rā
ରୁ	ଖା	khā	ଲୁ	ଲା	lā
ତୁ	ଙ୍ଗା	ngā	ଲୁ	ଶା	shā
ନୁ	ନା	nā	ନୁ	ନା	nā
ତୁ	ତା	tā	ହୁ	ହା	hā
ପୁ	ପା	pā	ଯି	ଆ	ā
ଫୁ	ଫା	phā	ତୁ	ତା	dā
ବୁ	ବା	bā	ଫୁ	ତା	dhā
ମୁ	ମା	mā	ଗୁ	ଗା	gā
ଜୁ	ଜା	jā	ଗୁ	ଘା	ghā
ଚୁ	ଚା	chā	ଫୁ	ଭା	bhā
ଥୁ	ଥା	thā	ପୁ	କା	jhā

These characters give no sound unless a vowel sign is added.

The Ahom vowel sign 'ଯି' which is a fulcrum for carrying the other vowels, is read along with the consonants and considered as such. Using different signs to this, other vowels are formed and they are given below:—

AHOM VOWELS.
	Vowels.	Transcription and power.
1	ଯି	ଆ (ା)
2	ଯିଁ	ଆ ā
3	ଯିଁ	ଆ ā
4	ଯିଁ	ଇ, sometimes pronounced like the e in "met."
5	ଯିଁ	ଈ ī
6	ଯିଁ	ଉ ū
7	ଯିଁ	ଉ ū
8	ଯିଁ	ଏ e, as in "met."
9	ଯିଁ	ଏ ē, as in the Sanskrit e.
10	ଯିଁ	ଓ o, as in "often."
11	ଯିଁ	ଓ ū
12	ଯିଁ	ଓ ū
13	ଯିଁ	ଆଇ aī
14	ଯିଁ or ଯିଁ	ଆଓ ao (Dr. Grierson gives its pronunciation au, but this does not give the sound "ଆଓ").
15	ଯିଁ	ଏୟେ eu, sometimes pronounced like "ao." (Dr. Grierson gives its pronunciation as aī, but real pronunciation is either eu or ao).
16	ଯିଁ	ଆମ ām
17	ଯିଁ	ଏୟୁ iu
18	ଯିଁ	ଏ ā, as the a in all.
19	ଯିଁ	ଆଇ oi, as in boil.

The first vowel practically gives no sound without any sign being added. The second and third vowels give the same pronunciation and are freely interchanged at the present time.

No. 4 is pronounced both i and e.

The circle at the end of Nos. 11, 12, and 17 is dropped when the vowel is medial, No. 11 then becomes the same as No. 7, and No. 17 as No. 4. Nos. 6, 7, 11, and 12 are very often interchanged. No. 12 when used with a consonant loses its circle at the end and gives the sound of ū and e; as for example ঢ়ে (mūng) and ঢে (khen), respectively.

No. 14 has been written as "au" (আউ) by Dr. Grierson, but its actual sound is "আও," so I have written it as "ao."

No. 16 is considered as a vowel by the Ahoms. Although Dr. Grierson has shewn it as a consonant, I have taken it as a vowel, because it actually forms the function of a vowel.

Nos. 14 and 15 are often interchanged. The vowel No. 2 is added to the consonant characters to give them their sounds. They are noted below:—

AHOM CONSONANTS.

	Consonants.	Transcription.		Consonants.	Transcription.
1	ম	kā	13	ঢ	ra
2	ঢ	khā	14	ৱ	lā
3	ঢ	ngā	15	ৱ	shā
4	ঢ	nā	16	ৱ	ñā
5	ঢ	tā	17	ঢ	hā
6	ঢ	pā	18	ঢ	dā
7	ঢ	phā	19	ঢ	dhā
8	ঢ or ঢ	bā	20	ঢ or ঢ	gā
9	ঢ	mā	21	ঢ	ghā
10	ঢ	jā	22	ঢ	bhā
11	ঢ	chā	23	ঢ	jhā
12	ঢ	thā	24	ঢ	kha

Vowel symbols can be attached to any consonants just as they are attached to the vowel sign "ঢ" (a) No. 1.

The consonant No. 16 has the power of nya, but at the end of a syllable it is pronounced as n, and sometimes as y. Thus ঢে, much, is pronounced khen, and ঢে, gladness, is pronounced uy.

In manuscript Nos. 4 and 18 are written almost the same, but the latter is elongated at the end, thus ঢে (nā), ঢে (dā).

Nos. 8 and 9, ঢ (ba) and ঢ (ma) are often written alike, so it is very difficult for one having no knowledge of Ahom to distinguish one from the other. No. 8 is pronounced bā when initial and wā when final.

The letters ৱ, ৱ and ৱ are often compounded with other consonants. In such a case, ৱ becomes the vowel ঢ (No. 18). Below I give a few examples of compounds with r and l:—

ঢে ৱ (mrā); ঢে ৱ (trā); ঢে ৱ (kli).

Dr. Grierson in his note on Ahoms, see page 5, has made mention of a letter ঢ (Virāma), but I have not come across any such letter in the Ahom manuscripts. In its place I have given one, No. 24, called rulāi. This is used just at the beginning of any writing as we (Assamese Hindus) generally write "Sri Hari," "Sri Ram," etc. Besides Virāma, he has shown two other letters mrā and kli, as consonants, but they are compound consonants, as given above. I have therefore excluded them from the list of single consonants.

The following are the Ahom numerals:—

1	ৱ	লেং, leng	১ , 1
2	ৱ	শং, shāng	২ , 2
3	ৱ	শাম, shām	৩ , 3
4	ৱ	শি, shi	৪ , 4
5	ৱ	হা, hā	৫ , 5
6	ৱ	কুক, ruk	৬ , 6
7	ৱ	চিট, chit	৭ , 7
8	ৱ	পেট, pet	৮ , 8
9	ৱ	কাও, kāo	৯ , 9
10	ৱ	শিপ, ship	১০ , 10

RELATIONSHIP OF AHOM TO KHÄMTI AND SHÄN.

I have no knowledge of Khämti and Shän, but to show the affinity of the Ahom language with other Tai languages, I put here the following extracts from "Grierson's Note on Ahoms."

"Like Khāmti and Shān, Āhom belongs to the northern sub-group of Siamese-Chinese languages. It bears somewhat of the same relationship to them that Sanskrit does to Pāli, but the relation is much closer. The most striking point of resemblance between the two relationships is in the simplification of compound consonants.

Compound consonants are almost entirely wanting in Khāmti and Shān. Siamese occupies an intermediate position. Compound consonants are written, but are not always pronounced. Sometimes instead of the second consonant remaining unpronounced, a very short vowel (svara-bhakti) is inserted between the two letters.

The following examples illustrate the way in which Āhom compound consonants have become simplified :—

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
khrāng	khāng	khāng	property.
khring	—	khīng	body.
khrīu	khīu	khīu	tooth.
khrung	khüng	khüng	divide.
phräü	phāü	phāü	who?
phring	—	phīng	be many.
phrum	phum	phum	hair.
krai	kai	kai	be-far.
klāng	kāng	kāng	middle.
klin (klen)	kin	kin	drink.
compare kin	kin	kin	eat.

Note that in Āhom, the words for "eat" and "drink" are distinct. In Khāmti and Shān they are the same.

I now proceed to mention what other changes occur in the transition from Āhom to the modern Tāi languages.

1. As a rule the Āhom vowels are retained in Khāmti and Shān. There are very few exceptions, such as Āhom, Khrung, divide, Khāmti and Shān "Khüng."

2. As regards consonants, the following changes occur :—

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
ba	wā	wā	say.
bai	wai	wai	put.
bān	wān	wān	day.

Sometimes it becomes m, thus,

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
blāk	māk	māk	flower.
bān	mān	mān or wān	village.
ba	—	māw or wāw	a youth.
baü	maü	maü	a leaf.

In Shān the uneducated frequently pronounce m as b.

(b) Āhom d becomes Khāmti and Shān n or l, thus,

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
dai	nai	lai	obtain.
dāng	hū-nāng	khū-lāng	nose.
dau	nau	lau	star, Siamese dau.
dī	nī	lī	good, Siamese di.
dīn	—	lin	ground, Siamese in.
dip	nip	lip	alive.
dūn	nün or lün	lün	moon, Siamese düen.

The difference between Khāmti and Shān is not so great as it looks, for both languages freely interchange n and l. It will be noticed that Siamese retains the d.

(c) Āhom h usually remains unchanged, but sometimes appears in Khāmti and Shān as ng. Thus Āhom, hū an animal of the ox species; Khāmti and Shān ngō; Siamese, ngüa; Shān also wō.

(d) Āhom j becomes Khāmti and Shān y, thus,

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
ján	—	yān	ask.
jau	yau	yau	completion.
jū or ū	—	yu	abide.

(e) Ahom initial n becomes Khāmti and Shān y, thus,

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
nāng	yāng	yāng	be.
nüng	ying	ying	female.

(f) In Khāmti and Shān n and l are interchangeable. Hence we sometimes find an Āhom n represented by l, as in Āhom niu, a finger; Khāmti liu; Shān niu.

(g) Āhom r becomes h in Khāmti and Shān. Thus,

Āhom.	Khāmti.	Shān.	English.
rai	hai	hai	lose.
rāk	—	hāk	compassion, Siamese rāk.
rāng	hāng	hāng	a tail.
rāng	hāng	hāng	shout.
rau	hau	hāu	we, Siamese rāu.
rik	—	hik	call, Siamese rik.
rō	hō	hō	head, Siamese hua.
rūn	hūn	hūn	house, Siamese rūen.

It will be seen that Siamese usually retains the r.

In other respects the phonology of Āhom agrees very closely with those of Khāmti and Shān."

TONES.

Āhom like the modern Tāi languages undoubtedly used tones. Unfortunately it is not now possible to say what tones were used with words.

COUPLETS AND COMPOUND WORDS.

As in other Siamese-Chinese languages the differentiation of words by tones is helped out by the use of couplets. The system in its essence is this—two different words each with several different meanings, but possessing one meaning in common, are joined together and the couplet thus formed has only the meaning common to the two. For instance, take the word Khā and Phān. Khā amongst its other significations means (1) "a slave"; (2) "cut"; Phān amongst its other significations, means (1) "an order"; (2) "poor"; (3) "sorrow"; (4) "cut." The 'Khān-Phān' means cut and nothing else, because cut is the only meaning common to its two members.

Other examples of such couplets are :—

pāi-kā, go-go, to go.
nung-tāng, enclose-enclosure to place, to put on (clothes).
tāng-lai, all-all, all.
mūn-ken, rejoicing-rejoicing, happiness.

Sometimes in these couplets only one word has retained its meaning, while in other words it has lost its meaning and has become a "shadow word", the compound having only the meaning of the dominant word. Thus, we have pe-ngā, a goat, in which ngā has no meaning in this connexion, while pe by itself also means "a goat." In some of these lost couplets, the second member still retains a definite meaning, but has, so to speak, emptied itself of it in favour of the dominant member, this is very commonly the case with words like dai, to possess; bai, place, and the like. Thus—āo, take, āo-dāi, to take, to collect, bring.

heu, give, heu-dai, give, give out and out.
rāi, lose, be lost; rāi-dāi, to lose altogether, to be lost altogether, to die.
hup, to collect; hup-bāi, to store.

Another form which these couplets take is the juxtaposition of two words, not of identical, but of similar meaning, the couplet giving the general significations of both. Thus, khrāng, and large property; ling, cattle and small property; khrāng-ling, property generally.

There are other couplets the members of which possess not even similar but altogether different meanings, the resultant couplet having the signification giving the combined meaning of the two. Thus, bān, day, sun; tuk, fall; ban-tuk, sunset, evening.

INFLEXION.

All pure Āhom words are monosyllables; only words borrowed from foreign languages are polysyllabic.

Every word without exception denotes, primarily, the ideal of something, action or condition, such as a man, a tree, striking, going, sleep, death, etc.

Some of these words such, for instance, as tree can only perform the functions of nouns substantive, or can only with difficulty be twisted into performing other functions. Other words corresponding to what we call "Verbal nouns" are capable of being easily used in other functions. Thus, if in Āhom we wish to express the idea "slept," we say sleep-completion, if we wish to express "sleeps" we say "sleep-existence," and if we wish to express "will sleep" we say "motion-towards sleep."

It will thus be seen that the process of declension and conjugation do not properly occur in Āhom, nor can we divide the words into parts of speech. The relation which in Aryan languages we indicate by these two processes of inflexion are in Āhom indicated partly by the position of the various words in the sentence, and partly by compounding words together.

We cannot, properly speaking, talk of nouns and verbs, we can only talk of words performing the functions of nouns and verbs.

When inflexion is found by composition, most of the auxiliary words added to the main words have definite meaning, in some cases, however, these auxiliary words have lost their meanings as original words. In such cases we may talk of these auxiliary words as performing the functions of suffixes or prefixes.

As to what function each word in a sentence performs that is determined partly by custom.

In the following paragraphs the principal points of interest in Āhom Grammar are discussed.

ARTICLES.

There does not seem to be any word which performs the function of a definite article. When required a demonstrative pronoun can be used. For the indefinite article, the numeral "leng," one is employed. Thus, a man will be translated into Āhom as "kun-phu-leng" which literally means person-male-one. The interrogative indefinite pronoun "phreu" is used to mean "a certain."

NOUNS.

Gender.—Āhom words when performing the functions of nouns have no gender. When in the case of living creatures, it is required to distinguish sex, this is done by compounding the main word with another word meaning "male" or "female." The words most commonly used with human beings are "phu" for the masculine gender, and "mi" for the feminine. Thus, kun, a person; kun-phu, person-male, man; kun-mi, person-female, woman. Other words used are, lik, for the masculine and feng for the feminine. Examples are, khā, slave; khā-lik, a male servant; khā-neng, a female servant. With nouns of relationship mān and nāng are used. Thus po or po-mān, a father; nāng, a younger brother or sister; nāngmān, a younger brother; nāng-nāng, a younger sister.

In the case of irrational animals "thek" indicates the male sex and "me" the female, thus—mā-thek, horse,	mā-me, mare.

hu-thek, bull,	hu-me, cow.

In some instances, differences of genders is expressed by the use of different words. Thus, po, father; me, mother.

Number.—Usually the idea of plurality is inferred from the nature of the sentence. If however it is necessary to express it, this is generally done by prefixing the word "khāo" which is also used as the plural of the third personal pronoun, meaning "they." Example of its use are, khāo-khām-kulā, servants; khāo-mūn, rejoicings. Or some nouns of multitude, such as phring, a crowd, may be added as in kun-phring, people. With numerals no sign of number is required. Thus, Shāng-kun, two persons.

Case.—The relations of case are indicated by composition with some other word or by position.

The nominative is either the bare form of the word, or else optionally take the suffix "ko." Thus ko gives a definite force to the nouns to which it is attached. It is specially common with pronouns. Examples of nominative are—

(a) without ko,
luk-ngi lāt-khām, the younger son said.

(b) With ko
po-mān-ko ren åk mā, the father came outside the house.

When a noun is the direct object of a sentence, that is to say, when it is in the Accusative case, it takes no suffix or prefix. Thus, mān-ko, hung ngin, he sound hear, he heard a sound.

The accusative sometimes takes the suffix "māi." This is confined to pronouns. The accusative sometimes precedes and sometimes follow the verb. Thus—man ko hung ngin, he sound hear, he heard a sound.

nung tāng khēp tin-khāo, put shoe foot on, put shoes on his feet.

The relationship of the Instrumental case is indicated prefixing tāng, with. Thus, tāng khān (beat him) with a cudgel.

The relationship of the Dative case is indicated by prefixing the word "d," meaning place, hence "the place or object to which motion is directed." The same word is use to form the future tense. Examples of the Dative are—ti po kāo, to my father, ti mān ren, to his house.

The relationship of the Ablative case is indicated by prefixing "luk" or "luk tām," as in, luk po-leng, from a father.

The relationship of the genitive is indicated by the juxtaposition of the governed and governing word, the governed word being placed last. Thus, kip-khao, husk-rice, i. e. husk of rice.

The most usual way of expressing the Locative case is to employ the noun by itself, leaving the meaning to be gathered from the context. Thus, nung-tang mū chi-rāp chāp-khāp-bāi, put (on) hand a ring.

The Vocative case is formed by suffixing ai (which is always written hā). Thus po-ai, O, father.

ADJECTIVE.

In Ahom an adjective follows the word it qualifies. It thus occupies the same position as a word in the Genitive. Examples are: mung-jāo, country distant, a far country.

ren-noi, house small, a small house.

Comparison.—Comparison is formed with the word "kheñ" or "keñ" (pronounced khen or ken), which means "be better." The thing with which comparison is made, is put in the ablative governed by luk. Thus, di, good; kheñ di luk, better than.

The superlative is expressed by adding nām, many, or tāng, all. Thus, kheñ di nām, better (than) many; kheñ di nām nām, better (than) many many; kheñ di tāng nām, better (than) all many; all these meaning "best."

PRONOUNS.

The personal pronouns have different forms for the singular and for the plural. They are as follows. From Grierson's notes on Ahom, I give the Khāmti, Shān, and Siamese forms for the sake of comparison.

Ahom.	Khāmti and Shān.	Siamese.	English.
kau	kau	kū	I.
rau	hau	rau	we.
maü	maü	müng	thou.
shü	shü	su	ye.
mān	mān	mān	he, she it.
khau or mān-khan	khan or mān-khan	khau	they.

In the above, the suffix "mai" forms a genitive absolute, as in kāo-mai, mine."

A dependent genitive sometimes precedes and sometimes follows the governing noun, thus, we have both po kāo and kāo po mān, my father; luk mān maü, maü luk man, thy son.

The Demonstrative pronouns are nāi, àn nāi, this, and nān, à nān, àn-nān, that. Examples are tām-nāi, from this, then; mu-nāi, time this, then; ti-nāi, place this, here; now; àn-nān khām, that word; à-nān-tun, that tree. We have also i-u for this and heu for that but they are always used as adjectives, and they precede the word they qualify. Examples are i-u luk-mān, this son; heu-mung bān, that country.

The Relative pronoun is pān-ku, meaning "which." Thus, hu-me pān-ku, kāo khān jāo, the cow which I bought.

Interrogative pronouns are phreu, who? and shâng, kâ shâng, re, what? Thus, lik-khâ phreu, whose boy? mau chu kâ shâng u, your name what is, what is your name?

Phreu appears as an Indefinite pronoun, as in phreu na-kip, a certain field; phreu bau, any one not, no one.

Kâ-shâng means "how many" in kâ-shâng pi, how many years? Similarly phreu kun-phring, what person multitude, how many persons?

VERBS.

Conjugation.—When an Áhom word performs the function of a verb, it can, as it stands, be used for any tense, mood or voice, thus—

Present time.—Phreu kun-phring dâi khâo, how many persons possess rice.

Past time.—Mân-bâ, he said.

Future time.—Kâo po pâi lâo, I will go (pâi) to (my) father (and) will say (lao).

Imperative.—Mau khâlik bâi châm doiñ, thou servant keep (bâi) with, keep (me) with (thy) servants.

Infinitive.—Kâo bau pâi-kâ lâk, I not went to steal (lâk), I did not go to steal.

Verbal noun.—Bâi sheu-hing-jâo-o, (I) had performed watching (bâi), I had watched.

Past participle.—Bâ-bân (on) the said day, on the day referred to.

Active voice.—Pân-ku luk-ko râi-dâi mân tâng-lâi khâm, what son lost (râi-dâi) thy all gold, the son who lost all thy gold.

Passive voice.—Mân râi dâi, he was lost.

Voice.—It follows from the above that there is no formal distinction between the active voice and the passive. The same word has either an active or a passive signification according to the meaning required by the sentence. Thus, take kâo po, which means "I beat," on the other hand, kâo-mâi po, means "beat me" that is to say "I am beaten." Here there can be no doubt that the latter sentence is to be construed passively, owing to kâo mâi being in the Accusative case. But, if we take the example given above, mân râi dâi, it means both: "he lost" and "he was lost," and we can only gather that it is to be construed passively because the general sense of the context requires it.

Mood and tense.—As already said, the bare word itself can be used for any tense, and is frequently so used, but when this would lead to ambiguity, the accidents of mood and tense are expressed by the use of particles, the form of the main word never undergoing any change. It cannot be said that these are suffixed or prefixed to the word which performs the function of the verb, for they are often separated from it. Thus take the sentence, po mân pân kâ tâng lâi khâng-ling klâng shâng pi nân jâo, the father begin-to-divide all property between two elder sons, younger son complete, i.e. the father began to divide his property between his elder and younger sons. Here the word performing the function of a verb is pân-kân, divide-begin, and the particle indicating past time, jâo, is separated from it by six other words.

In fact, in Áhom, these particles do not give past, present or future time to any particular word in the sentence, but to the sentence as a whole. The word jâo which I have called a particle of past time is really an independent word whose root idea is completion.

In the same way other particles which give the idea of tense have their own meanings. Thus, u, the particle of present time, means "existence"; kâ, another particle of past time, means the place from which action starts; just as ti, the particle of future time, means the "place" to which the action is proceeding. It may be noted here that if in the same sentence there are many words performing the functions of verbs all in the same tense, then only one tense particle is supplied for all.

Subject to the above remarks, the relations of mood and tense can be indicated in Áhom in the following ways:—

The simple present takes no particle. It is always the word performing the functions of a verb standing alone. Thus (po kâo) ju (my father) lives.

The present definite is formed by adding u, remain after the word performing the function of a verb, as in (mân) nân u he is sitting.

The imperfect is formed by adding u-jâo, i.e. the past tense of u, as in kâo po-u-jâo, I was striking.

The past tense is formed by adding either jâo or kâ, as in mân bâ jâo, mân-bâ-kâ, he said. As explained above, jâo is usually put at the end of a sentence, far away from the word performing the function of a verb, but kâ is always attached to it.

The perfect is formed by adding koi to the word performing the function of a verb, dip-di-koi, has become alive and well. The perfect of u, remain, viz. u-ko is often used instead of koi alone, as in khâo-u-ko, has entered.

The pluperfect or Remote past is indicated by suffixing o to jâo of the past as in (mân-ko-tâng-khâng-ling) kin-jâo o (he) had eaten (all the property). A combination of jâo with the participial termination shi also gives the force of the pluperfect, as in tâi shi-jâo, having died was, had died.

The future is indicated by prefixing ti to the word performing the function of a verb, ti kâo-ko ren mân shâng bân pâi, I will go to your house to-morrow.

Another form of the future is made by suffixing nâ, as in pâi-ka nâ, will go. It is rare except with this verb. The kâ in this example is not the ka of the past tense. Ka is also a doublet of pâi meaning "go."

A past future is formed by combining a suffix of past time with the simple future, thus ti po will strike; ti po jâo, will have struck. Similarly with koi, u-ti-koi, will have been. Both these forms may be translated, according to the context, also as past subjunctives, I should strike, I should be.

The imperative may optionally take the particle shi, thus bāi or bāi shi put. The conditional mood is formed by shāng or shāng-bā with chāng in the apodosis. An example is,— mān chāng uñ (uy) cheu plāng shāng bā mān-ko thun, he would (had been) glad if he (had) filled

tāng kip-khāo
(his) belly (with) husks of rice.

It will be seen that the words performing the functions of verbs takes no special particles to indicate mood.

An indefinite participial force is given by suffixing shi. To give a past force o may be added. Thus tāi-shi, dying; pāi-nāi-shi, going unexpectedly; pāi-shi-o, gone. Often no suffix is added, as in bā-bān, said day, on the day referred to. At the same time, it may be remembered that participles are only verbal adjectives, and that it is just as easy for an Āhom word to perform the function of an adjective as to perform that of a verb, it is stretching the terminology of Indo-European grammar too far to talk of participles at all.

Similarly, it is useless to talk of Infinitives. The root word is of course capable of performing the function of a verbal noun. Thus, lāk means "steal," and must be translated "to steal" in kāo bān-lāk pāi kā, I not to steal went, I did not go to steal.

Causals, inceptives, potentials and continuatives are formed by compounding with other.

Numbers and Persons.—No word performing the function of a verb ever changes its form for number of person. Both must be gathered from the context.

ADVERBS.

Words perform the function of adverbs, just as they do those of other parts of speech. Most of them are compounds, and the meaning of the separate members is not always very clear. Examples are:—

mu-nāi, time-now, then; khān-mā-chām, quick-come-swift, as soon as; nā-kān-mu, previous-place-time, as usual; mā-lāo-kin, ever, at any time.

The negative particles are bau and mā, not. The usual verb substantive is u, be, but with bau, mi is used instead.

Most frequently, the force of an adverb is obtained by compounding the word by performing the function of a verb with some other word which gives it the necessary colour. Thus pāi-go, nāi, unexpectedness; pāi-nāi (to) go unexpectedly. So many others.

Prepositions and Postpositions.—In Āhom there are no regular prepositions, but in order to give the force of prepositions some words are put either before or after the words they refer. Accordingly they may either be called prepositions or postpositions. A few examples are given below:—

ān, before; ān kāo-mái, before me. bāi-lāng, on back, after.
āk, outside; ren āk, outside the house.
kān-pā, place-side, towards; mān-kān-pā, towards her.

CONJUNCTIONS.

There are some words performing the functions of conjunctions. The usual word is chām which means "and"; sometimes Chāng is written also. Chām may occur almost anywhere in the sentence. Other words used with the same meaning are:—

bā-ān, why-front, and poi, excess, and poi-ān, and before, and.

poi-lun-lang, again after back, and, moreover. Other words used as conjunctions are:—

Shāng, Shāng-bā, if; tu-bā, but; Chāng indicates the apodosis of a conditional sentence; Chu-chāng-nāi, because, therefore; to-lāk, nevertheless. pu-nāng-nāi, on account of this, in order that.

INTERJECTION.

The only interjections are ai, suffixed to the Vocative case, and nik-chā, alas. Ai is always written "ñ' (hā).

ORDER OF WORDS.

In Āhom, rules as to the order of words are not strict. The order of a simple sentence is usually, Subject, Object, Verb; of a noun and its adjective, noun, adjective; and of the possessive construction, governing word, governed.
