Description :

PDF-90b6e | Bahrain's tumultuous political landscape often overshadows the societal upheavals that this tiny country is facing. Sophia Pandya cuts through this to examine how international Islamic revivalism coupled with increased secular education has impacted Muslim women's religious practice and public position. She unsettles assumptions that education is a secularizing force for Muslim women, showing that... Muslim Women and Islamic Resurgence: Religion, Education and Identity Politics in Bahrain (Library of Modern Middle East Studies)
