

Passing Splendor

after Frank G. Karioris

We charge after time, grasping its horns, but youth is a supernova, burning bright until stars fade away. We try to rein in what we do not know as the dust settles. Memories lie bucked off in the shade of what was, as if they fall to the ground, only to disappear.