

The Life One Lives

One's life in its present condition is a continuous journey through time, space and energy. In life One has view points and experiences that render One's original purpose. The sum of One's life is equated by the journey One pursued along with One's satisfaction and peace obtained. What you see may not be what you get. This fact that what you see may not be what you get is a major problem and obstacle faced in the present world of man and woman. In this paradoxical matrix type of existence one becomes aware that the so-called impossible never existed
