

Red Light District

By: Tiffany Pennywell

In the bottoms

You could hear

The music playing

Hear the laughter as the men

Danced and drank with pretty ladies

And on the outside

You could see

The red lights shining

In the streets

As men

Followed their callers

And one such lady

So curvy

So fine

Had all the men

Just waiting

Begging in a line

Such mesmerizing beauty

She used to lure them in

A sashay of the hips

A turn and wink of an eye

Had all the men crooning

Whenever she walked by

And no woman ever kept a husband

Who fell under her spell

For they never returned home

Wives convinced they lost to hell

But it wasn't until when

All the red lights were extinguished

And the businesses were moved

That they realized that the reddened earth

Was soaked in their loved ones' blood
