

Jrayis Deyond

Jerrickthomas27@yahoo.com

Glitz and Glamor

You ever think about what goes on behind the scenes of people who are building an empire.

All night writing music for albums, writing poetry for a collection.

Late night prayers many nights of blood sweat and tears.

Early morning wake ups to head to classes, working hard to pass and collect your long over degree.

Working on the pitch for your small business ideas and how you can get it off the ground.

How you've been going around pitching your project to strangers, in danger of someone saying it's a no go.

And you still remain hungry, for the urge of wanting someone you've been longing for.

Day in and out you hustle, push forward to make your dreams come true.

Then after all your time, energy, prayers, and sacrifice a beautiful shift takes flight.

Everyone now sees your light shining, blinding out towards the world beginning to bind for you.

Everyone is ready to ride along the side of you, sharing in the joy that's raining on you.

Only to enjoy the fruits of your labor, when they haven't worked or labored over this venture you've ventured towards all the time before hand.

They're willing to ride when it's time to be seen and heard with you because it's time for the show, the lights, camera and action.

They want to enjoy your satisfaction, delight in your spectacles production for a brief moment on your dime and your time.

The magic that they see is only a moment you've been working a lifetime for now they wish to adore and admire you.

It was never what they've imagined or dreamed, but you already foreseen yourself at the victory.

The attention to the details were a little unsettling and terrible to mention during the interview but you made it possible with your Heavenly Creator

They only saw the blessings behind the glitz and the glamor.