

Dr. Neil Theise: The Boundless Body:

Inherent Compassion and Interconnectivity of our Self Organizing System

Dr. Neil Theise is a Diagnostic Liver Pathologist, Adult Stem Cell Researcher, Complexity Theorist, Zen Buddhist, initiated into Shamanic Practice and a Philosopher. This is a fascinating journey exploring principles from complexity theory in which you will understand more about the links between compassion and our place within the universe and the universe within us.

TOP EMBODIMENT TIP: Your breath - it is the only thing that connects you to the present moment - just come back to your breath and explore it.

Key Areas of the Talk:

- Wisdom, a complexity primer, the universe as a self organising system, practising intimacy with the boundless body and compassion.

Complex Systems: Complex Systems are Self Organising and Adaptive

- An example of a complex system is an ant colony and this is used to explore the concept.
- In complex systems the organisation works from the bottom up, not from the top down.
- The complex system is constantly adapting to changes in the environment.
- Ultimately the price of adaptation of a complex system is death.

Complementary Theory: Neither View of Something is the Complete View

- Boundaries are relative.
- Everything can be broken down into something smaller until the Quantum vacuum is reached.
- The Quantum vacuum is full of energy which turns itself into mass.
- We are the universe arising from the universe.
- Metaphysic Quantum Mechanics, Complexity, Relativity, Philosophy and religious metaphysics merge; The world is a self organizing system, arising from duality, giving rise to non-duality.

Compassion: Your Body is the Universe and the Universe is Your Body

- Boundaries are where one gives and receives.
- In the realm of the boundless body there is nothing to give and receive because there are no boundaries - no cell, no self.
