Key Highlights:

Our sector allocation strategy has undergone key changes between April 2024 and April 2025, reflecting shifts in macroeconomic conditions, policy developments, and sectoral outlooks.

Financial Services : The weight of the Financial Services sector has increased from 33.53% to 37.74%, marking a 13% rise. Since the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) implemented a rate cut along with other monetary easing measures, the sector is expected to witness a re-rating. Banking and financial companies are currently undervalued, and we anticipate a rebound in performance, making this sector a core overweight in our portfolio.

Telecommunication : The weight in the Telecommunication sector rose from 3.25% to 4.54%, a 40% increase. We see strong future potential driven by the growing demand for AI infrastructure, data centers, and internet usage. As digital transformation accelerates across industries, this sector stands to benefit significantly.

Oil, Gas & Consumable Fuels : Although the weight decreased from 12.87% to 10.31%, we have recently revised our outlook on this sector. We expect it to outperform in the coming period due to a potential revival in the Chinese economy following the US-China trade agreement. Rising global demand could also support prices and profitability in this space.

Automobile and Auto Components : The allocation to this sector saw a marginal decline from 7.57% to 7%, reflecting an 8% decrease. However, we have increased our strategic weight based on the sector's long-term potential. We believe it is poised for strong performance due to ongoing technological advancements, changing consumer preferences, and rising GDP per capita, which should boost demand.

Power : The Power sector's weight fell slightly from 2.9% to 2.79%, a 4% decline. Despite this, we see strong growth prospects due to rising electricity consumption across residential, commercial, and industrial segments. This sector is likely to outperform in the medium term.

Construction : While the sector's weight declined from 4.52% to 3.56% (-21%), we expect it to outperform going forward. Increased government expenditure on infrastructure development, including roads, housing, and smart cities, provides a strong tailwind for construction companies.

(FMCG) : The FMCG sector saw a decrease in weight from 8.15% to 6.96%, reflecting a 15% drop. The underperformance is attributed to muted rural and urban demand. Until consumer sentiment and spending patterns improve, the sector may continue to face challenges.

Construction Materials was one of the few sectors to see a positive change (+9%), supported by continued demand in real estate and infrastructure projects.

Information Technology Weight reduced from 13.04% to 11.11% (-15%) due to near-term concerns such as global tech headwinds and margin pressures. However, we have increased our weight in this sector, as we believe the long-term fundamentals remain strong, driven by digital transformation, cloud adoption, and AI integration.

Healthcare, Metals & Mining, and Consumer Durables These sectors witnessed reductions in weight due to sector-specific challenges and valuation concerns. Despite the current headwinds, we have increased our exposure in these sectors, anticipating recovery supported by structural demand and innovation.

Construction Materials Weight increased modestly from 2% to 2.18% (+9%), supported by sustained demand from real estate and infrastructure. Despite this increase, we have adopted an underweight stance, considering limited near-term upside potential and higher input cost risks.
