

Apply again

You have a purpose in your life.

Fundamentally anything you want has a purpose, hopefully to make the world a better place.

You need to set :

- A 10 yr goal
- A 5 yr goal
- A 1 yr goal
- This week's goal
- Today's goal

It's never a straight line to success, but eventually you reach your purpose.

"If i can become a professional copywriter, it'll get me closer to my purpose"

Don't give up when you inevitably don't get the job you want. And they say no after all of the work and effort you took to convince them.

When they DO say no, think about your purpose, what you'll get by achieving your goal, make it big enough, make it large enough.

Generally in life, any temporary setback is just a little blip in your journey.

What are you going to do? Apply again, keep applying

Keep on applying. Don't give up.

Your purpose will test you, you must rise to the challenge.

It's 100% guaranteed you will fail, so there's no reason why you can't apply again.

If you get rejected 1000 times, but it's related to your purpose in life, wouldn't you apply again? Turn that into 1001 rejections, until you do succeed.

Think of it as a test, you have to constantly prove all the time that you're worthy.

Failure and how you deal with failure is how you prove you deserve your purpose.

Questions:

Why do you think copywriting will help you achieve your goals?

Should you stop doing work in advance when you get rejected multiple times?