Algorithms of Late-Capitalism Issue 9

KALEIDOSCOPIC FUTURES

Looking through a kaleidoscope reframes reality in unexpected and spectacular ways. Its refracting lens allows us to see our world as an array of multiplicities, reconfigured into a captivating vision of something new and different.

In this edition of Algorithms of Late-Capitalism we ask: what happens if we view our technological reality through a kaleidoscopic lens comprised of radically different values, perspectives, experiences, and knowledges? Perhaps we can create visions of alternative and inspiring futures that are not predicated on the normative imperatives of productivity, profitability, efficiency, and Silicon Valley ideology.

To create such spectacular speculative visions, we invited our zine workshop participants to consult with the Oracle of Transfeminist Technologies and use its prismatic perspective to create new and inspiring kaleidoscopic visions of the future.

This issue of Algorithms of Late-Capitalism was created by internet teapot (Karla Zavala Barreda and Adriaan Odendaal) and the students of the Erasmus Mundus Media Arts Cultures MA programme.

Why can't everybody just let me be?
To be free with my opinions and the clothes I wear
I want to have a space where I can be myself.
Where no one questions me for the choices I make.
A place where you won't come to interfere.
Here and there, I look, where things would go as planned.
At this moment, I feel the only safe space for me is a trash can.

The Emotional Bin

trash bin as a metaphor of deteriorated bodies in late capitalism worlds where the urgency to produce take our self caring time away so we can not really inhabit our bodies fully, just use it as a deposit of things, like a trash bin may be an emphatic trash bin in the future can help us to unburden of daily stresses so we can have time to focus on the non productive side of live

Our reimagined fanny pack would have two primary functions: documenting moments it finds significant to the user through sensing changes in the body (e.g. heart beat); checking the "vibe" of the surroundings.

The aim of the vibe check fanny pack is to protect you from nasty situations and help you trust your instinct to focus on better vibes.

SITUATION #1

The user is in a violent or dangerous situation. e.g. police violence. The bag, sensing the danger, will start documenting the surroundings, which could further be presented as evidence in the user's defence. In a way this is a counteraction against police body cams.

SITUATION #2

You would like to meet someone, make friends or even change jobs yet always end up meeting the wrong people. The vibe check fanny pack will help you find all of this by telling you if the vibe is right and if their intentions are good. No more awkward dates, horrible coworkers, annoying neighbours or toxic relationships.
