Przeczytaj tekst, który został podzielony na trzy części (A–C), oraz pytania go dotyczące (4.1.–4.4.). Do każdego pytania dopasuj właściwą część tekstu. Wpisz rozwiązania do tabeli.

Uwaga: jedna część tekstu pasuje do dwóch pytań.

In which paragraph does the author

4.1.	comment on the idea that libraries will disappear in the near future?
4.2.	describe a structure that was built to function as a library for a limited period of time?
4.3.	mention different roles libraries can take on to serve the community?
4.4.	refer to a scheme which was a response to technological progress and led to a variety of useful ideas?

THE LIBRARY IS DEAD, LONG LIVE THE LIBRARY!

- A. Librarians have a long history of overcoming geographic, economic and political challenges to bring the written word to an eager audience. They remain true to this goal despite the rapid changes in how we read and share books. Part of what has changed is architectural. Instead of the stately building in the centre of town, a local library might now be anything from an imaginative architectural masterpiece resembling the inside of an iceberg to a wooden tower covered with recycled food packaging. The latter, known as “The Story Tower”, was built by Latvian design students as a substitute for a public library while it was being refurbished.
- B. In an age when online reading on smartphones and tablets seems to undermine traditional libraries, the introduction of mobile phones has surprisingly given rise to a whole new type of library building: the telephone box. By 2002 British Telecom had removed most of the traditional red phone booths but rather than do the same with those still remaining, the company came up with its national “Adopt a Kiosk” programme. People were offered the chance to buy one of the iconic phone boxes for one pound and encouraged to turn them into spaces that local residents would actually use. Many of them now serve their communities as libraries, mini art galleries, lunch salad stands or first-aid points equipped with defibrillators.
- C. Many public libraries offer more than collections of books. They function as advisory centres and assist their members in overcoming economic or social barriers. Others provide a welcome dose of culture for commuters, beachgoers or prisoners. All libraries aim to promote reading, particularly in remote areas. For example, each library boat on the Mekong River in China carries around 1,000 titles. At stops, staff organize games and children can borrow books overnight. Given all these examples, I would say that the reports of the fast approaching death of the library seem to have been greatly exaggerated.

VIRGINIA WOOLF SHIPS OUT

Before Virginia Woolf was a literary titan and John Maynard Keynes was the father of modern economics, they were part of a group of friends that informally called themselves the Bloomsbury Group. The group comprised writers, artists and intellectuals.

On February 7th, 1910, they played the most famous hoax in British military history. At the time the HMS Dreadnought was the most heavily armed ship in the Royal Navy. 5.1. _____ Given such a chance, his companions, with Virginia among them, instantly agreed to take part. They were to sneak aboard the HMS Dreadnought, disguised as the Emperor of Abyssinia and his courtiers. Why risk the anger of the Royal Navy? Because it was funny!

The jokers sent a telegram informing the ship's commander about their visit, and then they simply showed up aboard. Amazingly, it worked. 5.2. _____ Despite the intentionally amateurish accessories, including one moustache that began falling off in the rain, the party stayed in character for the entire tour. When they spoke, it was in an invented language, a mixture of Latin, Swahili, and babble. 5.3. _____ The real reason was different, they refused because they were afraid that their makeup would come off.

The tour ended without the crew suspecting a thing. But then someone called reporters and British papers published a story about it. The Dreadnought sailors were soon teased in the streets and King Edward expressed his displeasure with the incident. In the face of such humiliation, the Navy was forced to take action. Two of the male jokers were punished. 5.4. _____ After a while, however, public attention turned to other events and to everyone's relief, the incident aboard the ship stopped being a front-page story.

- A. At one point, they declined a meal saying that the food had not been prepared to their specifications.
- B. To one of the most eccentric jokers in the circle, poet William Horace de Vere Cole, it seemed like the perfect place for the Bloomsbury Group to play a trick.
- C. Knowing that no women were allowed on board, Virginia Woolf decided to trick the British Navy into giving her and her companions an exclusive tour of their flagship.
- D. Wearing turbans, gold chains and lots of makeup on their faces, the "Abyssinians" were welcomed with an honour guard and a red carpet.
- E. Woolf was shown mercy because she was a woman, even though the presence of a female on the ship was the greatest source of the Navy's embarrassment.

WHAT HAVE I DONE?

I do love to sit and look out of the window. Why do I need TV when I have forty-eight apartment windows to look at across the vacant lot and a thin strip of Lake Erie in the distance? I've seen a lot out of this window. I was four when we moved here in 1919. When I grew up, I moved over to Cleveland Heights for eighteen years, but then I had to go back to take care of my parents. This has always been a working-class neighbourhood. It's like a cheap hotel where you stay until you've got enough money to leave. Now I'm the only one staying. Staying and staring out of this same window.

One day last spring I looked out and I saw something strange. Down in the lot, there was a little black-haired girl, hiding behind an abandoned refrigerator. She was working in the dirt and looking around nervously all the time. Then I realized that she was burying something. I never had children of my own, but I've seen enough in this neighbourhood to know she was mixed up in something she shouldn't be. I thought, just for a moment, about calling the police. I thought she must have been burying something valuable, money or a gun. The next moment, she disappeared like a rabbit. Then we had a long spell of rain and I didn't set eyes on her once. After that the weather turned warm and I saw her twice more, always in the morning, on her way to school. She was crouched down with her back to me so I couldn't see what she was doing. My curiosity burned like a fever inside me. Then one morning she was there, glancing about, and she looked straight up at this window. I pulled my head back behind the curtain. I wasn't sure if she'd seen me. If she had, she wouldn't leave something valuable buried long. Then I knew I'd have to dig it up before she did.

I waited an hour after she left. Then I took an old butter knife and my cane and went down all three flights of stairs. I worked my way through that awful jungle of junk and finally came to her spot. The ground was wet there so it was easy digging. I searched through the soil, but didn't find anything, except for a large white bean. I tried a new spot and found another bean, then a third one. Then the truth of it slapped me full in the face. I said to myself, "What have you done, you stupid woman?" Two beans had roots and I knew I'd done them harm. I felt like I'd read through the girl's secret diary and had ripped out a page without meaning to. I laid those beans right back in the ground, as gently as sleeping babies, and covered them with soil.

The next morning she was back. I peeked around the curtain. She didn't look up here or give any sign that she'd noticed something wrong. I could see her clearly this time. She reached a hand into her schoolbag. Then she pulled out a jar, unscrewed the lid, and poured out water onto the ground.

VALUABLE DISCOVERIES IN THE WALLS OF AN ARTIST'S HOME

When the City of Boise, Idaho, bought the home of artist James Castle (1899-1977), they decided to convert it into a cultural centre which would pay tribute to the artist. As it turned out during renovation work, the artist had much more than a house to contribute to that mission.

Castle was born deaf and never really learned to read, write and speak properly. But from a very young age, he developed a love of drawing. Depending entirely on his inventiveness he created art using unusual materials and drawing tools, for instance old wallpaper, matches, sticks, and apricot pits. Eventually, in the 1950s, he became a renowned artist.

After buying Castle's property, the city started to renovate the house. It was during the restoration of the former living room that workmen notified experts from the city art department about some items they had discovered. Hidden in a small crevice<sup>1</sup> at the bottom of a wall there were 10 drawings, some wooden sticks, nails, matches, and jar lids. Similar objects were found in a bedroom. Among the drawings there was a detailed plan of the very house in which they were discovered. A careful search for further hidden sketches was made throughout the estate, but it was in vain. Many more drawings are likely to have been hidden inside walls or in mouse holes but I suppose they must have disintegrated over the years and will never be recovered.

Although the discoveries came as a surprise to the city authorities, they were not unexpected for anybody who had ever lived on Castle's estate. His sketches had been found all over the property for years. Castle would regularly hide his drawings in different locations around the estate – in barns, sheds, attics and house walls. The only question is why. There are experts who think that these things were precious to him in some way, so he might have treated the walls as a sort of time capsule with his works and tools to be discovered in the future. And so we are left with pieces of art worth $75,000 and an inspiration to make up theories why he never revealed all of his accomplishments.

IS IT POSSIBLE TO FRY AN EGG ON THE SIDEWALK?

The question comes from the saying “It’s so hot you could fry an egg on the sidewalk!” Those who have tried to do so, have most likely 8.1. _____ up with a mess resembling scrambled eggs. Why is that?

An egg needs a temperature of 158°F (70°C) to set. In 8.2. _____ for the egg white to become firm, proteins in the egg must modify. That won’t happen until the temperature rises enough to start and maintain the process.

The sidewalk presents several challenges to this. Sidewalk temperature can differ 8.3. _____ on its composition, the air temperature, and whether it is in direct sunlight or not. Robert Wolke, in his book What Einstein Told His Cook: Kitchen Science Explained, points out that a concrete sidewalk might only reach a temperature of 145°F (63°C), which is not enough to fry an egg evenly.

Still, the idea of frying an egg on a sidewalk is so intriguing that the city of Oatman, in Arizona, hosts an annual Solar Egg Frying Contest on the 4th of July. Contestants get 15 minutes to make an attempt using solar power, i.e. sunlight, alone. However, some aids, 8.4. _____ as mirrors or magnifying glasses, are allowed. They help to focus the heat onto the egg itself.
