NEVER GIVE UP

4.1.

Few Olympians have as many chances of winning an Olympic gold medal as the Ukrainian-born ice skater Aljona Savchenko. In 2002, she represented Ukraine with Stanislaw Morozow. Then she started to represent Germany with Robinson Szolkovy. They took part in three Winter Olympics together. At their first attempt, in 2006, they did not win a medal. In 2010, the pair came 3rd but they felt disappointed. In 2014, in Sochi, Savchenko and Szolkovy were the favourites. But again they won bronze medals. Their dream of winning Olympic gold hadn't come true.

When Robinson Szolkovy decided to retire from skating, Aljona had to look for a new partner. In 2016, she teamed up with Bruno Massot, a skater from France. However, a year later Aljona twisted her ankle badly during training and this caused a long break in their preparations for the 2018 Winter Olympics in South Korea. Another problem was that to represent Germany, Massot had to change his nationality. He managed to pass the final test to become a German citizen on 7th November 2017, shortly before the Olympics started.

4.3.

At the 2018 Winter Olympics, Savchenko and Massot skated their short programme to Caro Emerald's "That Man". Their performance, however, was not perfect, because at one point in the programme Bruno accidentally did a double jump instead of a triple. As a result, they lost many points and after the first stage of the competition they found themselves in 4th place. Aljona felt sad because it seemed that her dream of winning the Olympic gold medal had very little chance of coming true.

4.4.

But the next day, Savchenko and Massot came back strong in their free programme, the second stage of the competition. They made no mistakes this time, and amazed the crowds with their beautiful choreography and difficult jumps and spins. Their score was so high that they set a new world record. They managed to beat all the other pairs and win the gold medal. Aljona could finally celebrate!

Sassy

For years I'd wanted to adopt a dog from a well-known shelter but I couldn't decide what kind of dog I wanted. One day, I was looking at the shelter website, and I saw her face. Her name was Sassy, a 7-year-old medium-sized dog. I fell in love with her, and on the same day I went to the shelter.

When Sassy saw me, she immediately liked me. Although I was worried because she weighed a lot and had some health problems, I decided to take her home.

Adopting Sassy is the best thing I've done in my life. The only problem is that Sassy gets tired quickly so we avoid going for long walks. One of the things I like most about her is that she is not aggressive at all.

My experience shows that you should give every dog a chance. I'm glad I have her.

A conversation about dogs in an online chat room

- Mark: Well, I've been walking other people's dogs regularly for a year. I think being a dog walker is quite hard at times, but I like it and I earn some extra money.
- Kate: What's the hardest thing about it?
- Mark: Well, sometimes I have to walk several dogs on the same day. Then I have to plan everything carefully. But the job keeps me fit.
- Kate: In my job I wash dogs and then brush their fur. I love what I do because it is both fun and creative. But the dogs move around a lot when I'm working on them, so sometimes it is quite hard work for me.
- Brenda: As a vet's assistant, I often have to look after sick dogs. Some of them are really difficult to handle, but it's usually because they're scared.

AT LAST

At 8.30 that evening, George Jackson was hiding with his bicycle in a dark side street off Woodstock Road. From his position, he could see the phone box. There was nobody in the street. It was a full moon. The night was cloudless and clear, which was unusual for that time of year. The time was passing very slowly and Jackson was shaking, definitely not from the cold, because the weather was almost summery. "If only someone had just lent me the money, I wouldn't have to go through all this", he thought with anger.

Suddenly he saw the lights. The blue Rolls-Royce appeared, moving very slowly. Then it stopped. The driver got out, and carrying a brown bag, went to the phone box. As the man passed under the street lamp, Jackson saw that he was of medium height, about forty, with dark hair going grey and dressed in an expensive suit. "Too expensive for a detective," thought Jackson. Suddenly he went cold with fear as he saw the man dialing slowly. Was he calling the police? After a few words to whoever was at the other end of the line, the man came out, put the bag behind the phone box, walked back to the Rolls and drove off. The road was as quiet as a grave.

Jackson hesitated. When he had first thought of getting money from Richards, it had all seemed so easy. Now he wasn't sure whether to pick it up and go home quickly, or wait in case someone was watching him. He ended up waiting for fifteen minutes, and then, trying to appear normal, he walked to the phone box and picked up the bag quickly. There was no traffic, and the only person he could see in the distance was a person in a long coat, crossing the road with arms full of books. It was a university professor. Jackson put the bag into his bicycle basket and rode off towards Jericho.

He was beginning to feel more confident as he arrived outside his house. The stress had disappeared and he was able to calm down. After all, he had collected the money, and nobody had noticed him. He took the bag from the basket, and went inside. After he had made himself a cup of tea, he sat down in the armchair, too tired to feel excited. "At last," he whispered, "I think my worries are over."

SHOP, BUT DON'T ENTER: THE STRANGE WORLD OF DARK STORES

'Dark stores' look like regular supermarkets, but if you tried to go into one of them, you would be surprised. 7.1. ____ Instead, supermarket employees, who are called 'pickers', do the shopping. Their task is to collect items that people have ordered online.

Although dark supermarkets are similar to normal shops inside, there are some differences. 7.2. ____ On both sides of them there are shelves which contain products that are marked with identity numbers instead of product names. Pickers walk around the shop with plastic boxes and fill them with the items that a customer has ordered.

Although shopping online is very convenient, some customers don't like staying at home and waiting for a delivery. 7.4. ____ If you choose this option, you can stop on your way home from work at one of the many pick-up locations. Often they have special lockers from which you can collect your shopping at any time you want.
