Director's Teapot

We are off to a great start as we enter the "BER" months because we will be celebrating one of the happiest occasions in school – TEACHERS' DAY. Every teachers' day in PCGS is a BIG day – it is like a carnival of some sort. Everyone seems to be happier and courteous than usual. Lots of beautiful things and preparations are happening all at the same time. The day starts with a whirlwind of greetings "Happy Teachers' Day" here and there! You see real and fake roses, but who cares? Somebody hands you a piece of candy or chocolate, with your name or no name at all – no big deal! Students running here and there to catch their teachers – with gifts here, cards there, tokens for one's favorite teacher/s - all expressions of love and appreciation. The eventful day usually ends with a heart-warming and sometimes hilariously funny program in the gym organized by the Junior and Supreme Student Government. On many occasions like this, the day ends with no time to reflect and process the day's significance. Why all the bustle and excitement on Teachers' Day? Whether or not you agree with me, teachers DO make a difference in one's life just like one of my favorite teachers –

She was my PE/Music/Girl Scout teacher. She was also my Language teacher. She was fair-skinned with short hair and no bangs. She always wore high heels even during our PE and Scouting time. She required us to execute the commands properly with everyone doing the same move at the same time. We can march gallantly. During Language time, she required us to answer in complete sentence. Music class was always a delightful time – my eyes traveled with her hands on the keys of the piano. She taught us songs from other lands; she also taught us songs from around the regions in the Philippines. We sang these songs in their dialect. Music became a big part of my growing up years up until today. My teacher taught me that music will live on even if all things will perish under the sun. I believe this is so because I know that I will keep on singing throughout all eternity. My teacher gave me her music. Thank you, teacher!
