Acknowledgment

I am forever grateful to the Young India Fellowship for the transformative experience that it provided me.

I thank Pallavi and Aakriti, for editing this story, and Anushka, for her brilliant illustrations.

Thanks to Meghna and Alishya, the two brave and beautiful women who envisaged this project and made it happen, for allowing me to be part of this initiative.

Nila and Najam were seven year old twins who were also best friends.

They shared a bench in section C of the third standard classroom in Saint Mary's Matriculation school in Coimbatore.

Everyday after class,
they played together.

Nila's favorite toy was their jig-saw puzzle of an aeroplane. She could solve it in eight minutes because she had already practised eighty-four. Nila also liked to build a human being, planes, and other toys using building-blocks.

Najam found the jig-saw puzzle very boring. He loved his slate and chalk pieces. He would act like he was the teacher. Nila was his student, and the slate was his black-board.

If his students were sick, he would make them hot rasam using his Kitchen set and he would allow them to sleep.

(can you guess what Nila and Najam's toys are?)
