Religion and the Public Conversation

This course introduces students to the interdisciplinary study of religion and its engagement with society and culture. We will identify where and how religion operates in the public conversation, especially in, but not limited to, the United States. Classes will be focused around topics that intersect with religion in the public conversation such as place, media, race, body, art, and ethics. Students will develop recognition of the different ways people use religion to construct meaning, boundaries, and identity and will demonstrate the ability to engage in informed dialogue around issues of religion.

REL 236/NES 236: Rebecca Faulkner

Introduction to Islam

This course is an introduction to Islam survey for undergraduates. The course is framed in terms of Muslims' self-understanding and includes pre-modern, modern, and contemporary sources. It begins in pre-Islamic Arabia and ends with contemporary material. We will use a variety of media, including art, music, and film to emphasize the varieties of Muslim experience and explore the contestations and adaptations of what it means to be Muslim.

REL 246/JDS246: Martha Himmelfarb

Ancient Judaism from Alexander to the Rise of Islam

This course offers an introduction to the development of ancient Judaism during the eventful millennium from the establishment of the Torah as the constitution of the Jewish people in the fifth century BCE--an event that some have seen as marking the transition from biblical religion to Judaism--to the completion of the other great canonical Jewish document, the Babylonian Talmud, in perhaps the sixth century CE.

REL 251/HLS 251/MED 251: Jonathan Henry

The New Testament and Christian Origins

How did Jesus' earliest followers interpret his life and death? What were secret initiation rites and love feast gatherings about? How did women participate in leadership? How did the Roman government react to this movement and why did Jesus' followers suffer martyrdom? How did early Christians think about the end of the world, and what did they do when it did not happen? This course is an introduction to the Jesus movement in the context of the Roman Empire and early Judaism. We examine texts in the New Testament (the Christian Bible) and other relevant sources, such as lost gospels, Dead Sea scrolls, and aspects of material culture.

REL 254: Wallace Best

Modern Evangelicalism in the United States

This course will trace the history of American Evangelicalism from its roots in the early nineteenth century to rise of the Religious Right in the 1980s and birth of "right wing politics" of the twenty-first century. We will note key figures, events, and institutional expressions of evangelicalism, as well as its large impact on American politics and popular culture.

REL 263: Gabriel Citron

Religion and its Modern Critics

The most penetrating critiques of Christianity have the power to unsettle our sense of self and disrupt our most natural ways of being - for Christians and non-Christians alike. For these critiques don't focus on attacking religious beliefs alone; rather, they target many of the deepest values, attitudes, and tendencies at the core of Christianity and Christian-molded cultures, and perhaps even at the core of our humanity. This course explores some of the key 19th and 20th century critiques of Christianity. It will involve opening ourselves up to the self-reckoning demanded by the likes of Kierkegaard, Emerson, Nietzsche, Baldwin, and Butler.

REL 352: Elaine Pagels

Who Was or Is Jesus?

Who Was - or is - Jesus In History, Art, Film, Music, Politics? What do we actually know about Jesus of Nazareth? We start by looking at the earliest known sources--accounts in the New Testament; what Jewish, Roman, Greek contemporaries said of him, and also ancient gospels not in the NT (like the Gospel of Thomas, Gospel of Mary Magdalene). Next, we'll explore an amazing range of interpretations of Jesus in art, poetry, music, theology, and politics, throughout 2000 years to the present, including newly emerging views.

REL 357/HIS 310: Seth Perry

Religion in Colonial America and the New Nation

This class covers the history of religion in America from European contact through the 1840s or so. Emphasis will be on primary readings, organized chronologically around a few recurrent themes: contact and exchange; authority and dissent; the relationship between theological reasoning and everyday life. We'll pay particular attention to changing conceptions of religion's role in social organization and competing religious views of human nature over time.

REL 373/AAS 320: Eziaku Nwokocho

Studies in Religion: Spirit Possession in Caribbean Religions

This course is designed to explore the possession experiences in Caribbean Religions. Through historical, ethnographic, autobiographical, literary and visual texts this course examines complex, gendered practices within the possession process, the vibrant spiritual energy that sustains communal connections during religious ceremonies, and the transnational imaginations that animate Caribbean religious practices in the Americas. Special attention will be given to Santería, Candomblé, Vodou, Myal, Palo Monte, and Revival Zion in the Americas.

REL394/CHV 394: Ryan Darr

Environmental Ethics and Modern Religious Thought

The current ecological crisis is often attributed to the effects of religion, especially Christianity. Focusing primarily on Christian theology and ethics (with some significant attention to Jewish thought as well), this course surveys and critically analyzes the emergence of religious discourses around environmental and animal ethics. The first half of the course considers recent works in "ecotheology." The second half of the course turns to particular ethical topics: climate change, environmental racism, biodiversity conservation, animal welfare, and food.

Junior Colloquium

First semester junior majors participate in a colloquium with a member or members of the faculty. In addition to assignments throughout the term that prepare majors to research and write a junior paper (JP), students are expected to produce a five to seven-page JP proposal.

A message from the chair

You know those days when you wake up peacefully in a room still dim and warm, and you rise and you stretch, let the delight of rest steer you into a twirl, and find yourself looking into the judgemental burn of your preceptor's eyes? I do, aged as I am.

I'm dusting off this mental relic, not just the lecture nap, but the lecture itself, and trying it on for size. Will it fit right? Will the speaker's characterless drone feel small without the sound of me slurping ramen layered over it? The warm light paired with my blue-attuned world? Will the dramatic cascade of the hall enhance me, or will it just make my ass look fat?

These are questions I'm sure we're all asking ourselves as we anticipate the new semester, and it's natural to wonder if things will feel the same. But I think it's a mistake to let the old come with the new. The void of the past year has prevented the usual transfer - of traditions, cultures, expectations, lore. It has left in its wake a bare and expansive canvas for your hands to illustrate a new Princeton from scratch, borne of your most vivid imaginations and your preferred angle of penis drawings.

I urge you to take this opportunity seriously. Rewrite the culture. Make Princeton the kind of place where people rub cheeks to say hello and shampoo their friends' hair in return for a favor. Take a break every class where we just stand up for a minute and practice gratitude for each other's legs. Hold bizarre rituals. Involve great uncles more frequently in our proceedings.

I don't know, go crazy - bring back "What it is" as a totally cool and normal way to open a conversation, and this time, let's not ignore how absolutely aggro it is. Lean into it, say it with conviction. Go further, make mysterious sentence fragments happen in general. Greet your friends with a straight-faced "Where it went." Start a lunch date with a potent "Why it happened". Next thing you know, you're bursting into your 9AM precept with a sunken face and suddenly alabaster skin, barking "What was the motive".

But that's just the kind of spontaneity I'm talking about. Why aren't we all half-immersed in a perpetual true crime episode? If it's what the heart wants, or what it chaotically summons after feverish Princeton-brand exhaustion, it's what the community needs. And if you're reading this and thinking "My God, this is a campaign for the complete bastardization of the Princeton social landscape," I saw you asleep in zoom lecture surrounded by empty shots of half & half. None of us have a leg to stand on anymore.

In sum, be free. Join a dope comedy magazine, dance like nobody's watching, love like you've never been hurt. But only if you goddamn want to.

With love,

Amanda Vera '22

Freedom to Pass - A Conversation with Princeton's Youngest Female Cult Leader

It's a warm October day in Central New Jersey. The black squirrels are nipping at discarded packing peanuts and the birds peck at the dead lantern flies among crushed four loko cans. A woman with a slender jaw and almost bug-like eyes sits gracefully at a table outside of a place the students affectionately call the Slums, much to the chagrin of the socially conscious. She blows her nose into a dining hall napkin. This girl - woman - is Candi P. Khan, the founder of Princeton's most successful cult.

DJ : Candi, can you outline your Princeton journey for me? Just to start.

CK : It started out as quite normal, well as normal as things could be. Things really started changing when I entered my third week of freshman year. Syllabi had been handed out. Readings were assigned. People who didn't know each other were already forming study groups. I realized that this was not my path. One morning I looked in the communal bathroom mirror at my reflection and said to her "this just will not do." To my surprise the rhythmic thumps in the nearby stall paused and two voices called out, "shut the fuck up". So I did, I shut the fuck up and I started planning -

Planning to choose your major?

No.

My bad, spoke too soon.

I started planning. I was going to be here for four years and people were already telling me what to do. But luckily. On the first day of constitutional interpretation class I learned about a little thing called the first amendment.

Tell me more.

So this is where it gets juicy. This tiny piece of constitution gives Americans freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of assembly, freedom of petition. And you know what else?

You tell me

Freedom of freaking religion

Ahhhhh, that is a good one.

I know isn't it.

And what did this mean to you at this moment?

A million things were coming together at once. My head was spinning. I was thinking a mile a minute for days. At one point I was lying on dark blue sheets and it all came to me. Our University's President's words echoed in my head and I took a break from the mediocre cunnilingus to write down my ideas.

What was this grand idea?

Ever since admission to Princeton, we have been bombarded by heinous words and then defenses by free speech. We listen to oppressive language and it is justified by "academic discourse". I realized it was my turn to shake things up and get people talking. I was going to pass my classes.

What was the first step you took towards this plan?

First I was fully assured by a first-year intern at the office of religious life that if I were to create a religion on campus, it was to be respected fully by the university...probably. I soon sent out a listserv inviting people to the first boba study break to introduce followers to my idea: a subversion of freedom of speech and an expression of freedom of religion. We were forming a cult where the main tenet was failure to participate in class.

How did this philosophy expand?

Over the next few weeks I began drafting our manifesto in google docs. When it came time to distribute our manifesto to professors during class, I tasked the "cult bitch", Kyle, with printing them out at Firestone Library. He complained, "those are the slowest" and "I don't want to print in color". I told him, "stop bitching". Each of our followers wordlessly and obediently placed these pamphlets on their instructors desks before class.

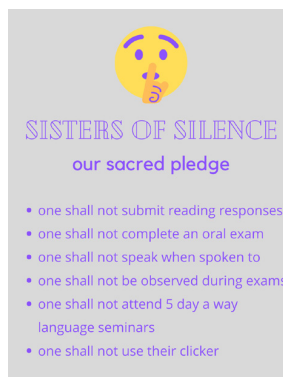

Do you know how this behavior will affect your grades?

I have no idea but I am hoping our professors do the right thing and choose to respect our freedom of silence and our right to express our beliefs through passivity.

It's two weeks until finals, have you really not checked your grades?

No, we choose to have faith in our process, our professors, and truly believe that our administration lacks the hypocrisy it would take to challenge our faith. If anyone is allowed to say anything, who can stop us from saying nothing?

Princeton removes Christopher L. Eisgruber's name from President Eisgruber

A recently-taken screenshot of the President's biography at <https://president.princeton.edu/>.

In an announcement that has sent ripples throughout the University community, President Eisgruber revealed that Christopher L. Eisgruber's name has officially been removed from President Eisgruber.

"Without a doubt, Christopher Eisgruber has made a number of tremendous contributions to the University," the President wrote. "However, if we wish to be honest about his legacy, we cannot dismiss his deeply flawed character."

"Eisgruber is perhaps the most extraordinarily deplorable person to have played a part in Princeton's recent history—if not American history. His contemptible thinking and policies are undeniably irreconcilable with our fundamental values."

Explained the man who had previously borne Eisgruber's name, "we must remain cognizant of our university's commitment to act as, at the very least, a marginally respectable presence in society."

One alum, who wished to stay anonymous, told me that they believed the change was long overdue. "I never understood why he associated himself with Eisgruber in the first place," the alum commented. "But the fact that Princeton's president is no longer connected to Eisgruber, that's at least one step in the right direction."

The same alum recalled a past Reunions event where they accidentally spilled their beverage on themselves after "that sleazeball [Eisgruber]" supposedly bumped into them. Afterward, the alum asserted, "he turned around and shouted 'ayo this fella drinking Bud Light' and everyone laughed."

On the other hand, many members of the University community have expressed their disapproval of the decision. Multiple Princetonians voiced their grievances anonymously via the Facebook group Tiger Confessions#, with one user calling the removal of Eisgruber's name an "imbecilic proliferation of cancel culture" unfairly applied to a man from a "different time and era."

Another post stated: "Why does the President think he has the right to dictate what everybody should think about [Eisgruber]?" The author also claimed that the President's "hurtful and unconstructive" comments about Eisgruber had no place in a community that cherishes "mutually respectful conversations."

A new name for the man formerly known as Christopher L. Eisgruber is yet to be determined.

Update: The President released a follow-up announcement that rebuffed rumors surrounding a potential replacement name.

"A number of recent statements, publications, and postings on social media have referred to me as 'David S. Pumpkins,' an eccentric character from the TV show Saturday Night Live," the President wrote. "Apparently, the name is inspired by our shared affinity for tacky, black-and-orange suits . . . I find this association to be not only irritating, but also downright insulting."

He concluded the message as follows: "From now on, any bastard who calls me [Pumpkins] will be forced to change their name to Woodrow Wilson. Please believe that."

ClassPath+ Subscription Service

With the highly successful rollout of ClassPath in the past year, administration members have looked to expand the content available on the platform in new and exciting ways. Enter ClassPath+, a new video streaming service in the likes of Disney+, Hulu, and Netflix.

“We’re really excited about this project,” Jill Dolan said in an announcement on Friday. “We hope it will provide extra, interesting orientation material for our students, as well as a place that creators can spearhead their own original content.”

As of now, the service will feature more orientation videos, including how to navigate the underground tunnels, what food to order at late meal, and how to deal with ant infestations. It also includes several original series, including a limited edition cooking show featuring President Eisgruber, a behind-the-scenes series on the construction work on Perelman and Untitled Residential College 8, and a variety of shows headed by student content creators.

Starting at $6.99, ClassPath+ will become available on August 24.

“Nice,” Marty MacNeil ’25 said in response to the fee.

Other students were less pleased. “Who’s going to pay $6.99 a month for this?” Denny Oldman ’24 asked. “I don’t want to watch a stupid student-led series on DIY projects I can do with my extra beer cans. I’ll just throw that shit away. Wait. Hold on. I’m not underage drinking. Wait, leave my name off of this please, make it anonymous or something—”

Angie Hu ’25, meanwhile, argued that ClassPath+ would exacerbate class divisions among the freshmen. “This is highly unfair to students who cannot afford the $6.99 charge,” Angie said. “What if I wanted to watch the extra orientation material, like the videos on how to spend your time when you’re waiting in line to shower? That sounds really interesting.”

In a recent town hall meeting, Dean Dolan answered a few of the concerns raised by students.

“We will try our best to make sure that access to ClassPath+ is as equitable as possible. ClassPath+ does come with a 30-day free trial, and students can split the cost of the service in a family plan style,” Dean Dolan explained. “We’re also toying with the idea of a ClassPath+ student discount, or bundling the ClassPath+ service with other services we’re rolling out soon, like AlcoholEdu+.”

Until then, students can pre-sign up for ClassPath+.

Cockroach Club? : Following Recent Roachatarian Crisis, Roaches on Campus Request their own Eating Club

The ongoing crisis, beginning August 17th and peaking the week of September 1st, resulted in the deaths of hundreds of roaches all over campus. Roaches on campus report an extremely hostile environment ever since students began returning for the fall 2021 semester. Their solution: a roach only eating club.

This is not the first time this solution has been suggested. Following the outrage caused by the roach massacre of January 2021, the university created a committee to evaluate and accommodate the safety of roaches in the Princeton community. However, over the summer recess staff turnover resulted in the dissolution of this committee.

“This process is cyclical: tragedy, taskforce, complacency. It’s exhausting for us who are trying to exist,” Roacheph Cock, 3 weeks, tells us “I just want a place where I don’t see a sneaker or a rolled up magazine everywhere I look.”

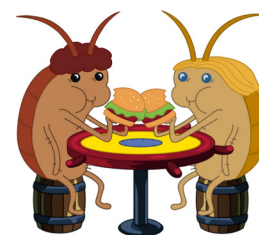

“We are members of this community too and we don’t deserve to feel threatened by underdeveloped hormone tanks that refuse to share their space with vulnerable creatures,” says Brittany Crunch, 8 weeks.

“I think it should be at a centralized location,” suggests an anonymous roach.

Human allies have reached out to the administration and have received no response. These compassionate humans have turned to social media to ask their fellow students for shoeboxes in which to host roach affinity groups and safe meal spaces.

Fanfic about STraight man

Dear hopelessly romantic yet also sexually inexperienced freshman,

Before I begin this letter I would just like to say YOU WERE HOT IN HIGH SCHOOL. You were just insecure.

Anyway, I'd like to tell you a COMPLETELY made up scenario that if you're not careful could happen to you once, twice, thrice, or for the entirety of your time here at princeton.

Today is Tuesday. You met a really nice guy in class today. Plus he's soooo cute! Ok, you showed your friends his tigerbook profile because "he's not really the social media type". He's definitely not hot but it's his personality you know? Sort of ugly hot. But, again, his personality seems sweet! He smiled at you.

It's Thursday. You see him in class again. He asks for your number! What?! This never used to happen in high school. Ok, play it cool, play it cool. Don't be your awkward self. You have male friends all the time. Yes, they usually don't have the same social gravitas as this dude seems to, but it's no different! You're just studying.

After you barely study you get dinner at the dhall. It's a bad day for First college dining but you can barely taste it with how distracted those pheromones are making you. Hubbah Hubbah! Then he touches your arm in an obviously romantic way. If you saw it you would know it, you know?

Seconds turn to minutes turns to hours. Is this love? This feeling is weirdly intense. He then asks if he can take you on a proper date. Jesus, Buddha, Hashem or Mohammad Is this a romcom?! I guess chivalry isn't dead!

The second date went so well! Afterwards, he invites you over and he kisses you! Oh my god it is a rom-com! You don't usually do this but the connection feels so strong you decide that just this once you will hook up with someone before dating officially. What a change from high school! You never used to be one of the cool sex-having people before. You are just so glad to get your hands on him. Sure, he isn't built, but you like really skinny guys, right? No he's not making you cum either, but that's a lot to expect from a guy generally, especially the first time. And he would know best, wouldn't he? As one of the cool sex having people. Hopefully next time he steps up his game!!

You text him to tell him what a great time you had! He should text back any minute, like he's been texting you before. Or any hour? Any day now? OH GOD! The agony is killing you.

Two days later he texted you back, after you pulled your hair out, cried on the floor and wore a grandma-sized pad without replacing it for 14 hours.

"Hey Y/N, I had a really good time too. But I want to be honest, I'm not looking for anything right now."

WHAT! What the hell was that? You were so much hotter than him! You were so much more charming than him! This is how he repays you? Why the fuck did he ask you on a date even? You know you would feel less frustrated if he had made you cum. Whatever, it's fine, he has every right to change his mind about you, right? You guess that's what you're supposed to say.

You know what though? You're a really good person. GOD, if only he knew what a goddamn good person you were. You decide that despite his assholery, you're going to kill him with kindness, as Selena Gomez once sang. MAYbe then he'll realize he's missing out on your fine ass. You reply a short but sweet message. "No worries! All good :)."

You see him in class again. You smile widely, showing off those dentally corrected teeth your mom paid for and are like "hey." He doesn't say anything, just gives a tight lipped smile awkwardly and chooses a seat on the other side of the lecture room.

Now you may be asking yourself, "Wow this sounds like a super realistic story, the author probably based on her own experiences, how can I avoid this fate myself?"

The answer to that, my young friend, is to avoid straight men. The thing is, straight men are not people, like the rest of us. In fact, any so-called "man" you see is just a robot created by capitalist forces to uphold patriarchal female subjugation. Each man you meet is intended by their higher power to degrade you and make you feel inferior, so that by the end of your dealings with them you are ready to be treated mediocrely by an entirely unattractive, uninteresting specimen or otherwise face a life of solitude. My advice to you is to get out of the system while you can, or forever regret it.

10 Red Flags Indicating That Your Frosh Week Fling is Actually Just Your Dad Making Sure You're Having a Good Time

With all the pent-up pheromones and start-of-college excitement going on around here, you won't be alone in finding a little September romance coming your way. And there ain't nothing wrong with that. Provided you follow these simple tips and make sure that your non-platonic new conquest is also non-paternal.

1. You meet at the Whitman College ice cream social after dinner on move-in day. There you are in line and there he is with a boy-next-door handsomeness. Perhaps even a little closer than next door, even. You can't help but introduce yourself. "Hi," you say, "I'm [your name here]." He grins back, as does one so well teed up he cannot possibly miss. "Hi, [your name here], I'm..." and with a note of disappointment he adds "Mark."
2. After OA, you reconnect at the next dining hall lunch. He's excited to see you again and asks very exacting questions about your purchases and applications of sunscreen and bug spray. He gets really deep in on the bug spray, and is seemingly annoyed you don't know the "DEET caliber." Whatever that is.
3. That night's your first time on the street, and you make sure to have the same route through the eating clubs as your budding beau. On the Cloister dance floor, you notice he doesn't seem to know the words to Mr. Brightside, or Sicko Mode, and seems positively put off by WAP. But he lights up, absolutely lights up, when the DJ has clearly run out of ideas and puts on September by Earth, Wind, and Fire.
4. Toddling back from the clubs, you end up at Wawa. He insists on getting one of the cold turkey sandwiches from the fridge on the wall opposite the hot food station. Mutters something about "the virtue of frugality."
5. You end up holding hands and watching the stars on Poe Field. "They're so beautiful," you say. "I think that's Cassiopeia," he says. "Huh?" you reply. "Yeah, I'm pretty sure that's Cassiopeia, just a minute I definitely have a telescope in the den somewhere." He skulks away, your mysterious stranger.
6. Thirty minutes later, you find him at the Clapp Hall pool table. He has been chalking a cue the entire time.
7. You kiss and his mustache is as stiff as the day is long. You don't know what artificial hair necessarily feels like but this would be it.
8. You smile to yourself, now in his room, sitting on his bed. He opens up his intel 1600 Workbook and fires up the DVD of Saving Private Ryan that was already in there.
9. Things start to get hot and heavy. As he removes your bra, humming the theme from Dallas, he asks very nicely if you want this. "Yes." "And you're eating?" "Yes." "And the professors aren't so bad, aren't they?" "Well, I guess not yet." "Take all the time you need and let us know when we can visit!" He smiles and you smile and try not to parse it too much.
10. Real bad cunnilingus

And those are just some of 'em!

Whoa: This Guy Knows Every Word to Mr. Brightside

Sources close to the matter report that at 1:34 AM in the Charter Club last Friday it was confirmed that Jake Burnell, 20, can sing along in near-synchronization to every single lyric of the 2002 The Killers hit “Mr. Brightside.” Bystanders were awed when, knowing exactly (or roughly) how many beats of the shimmery guitar intro to wait before starting, the junior and SPIA major recited the entire tale of cuckolding woe from start to finish with nary a mumble or shrug. Perhaps even more impressively, he spent the entire bravado performance simultaneously dancing, a routine clearly of his own choreography consisting of a series of hundreds of identical vertical spring-jumps.

“I thought it was something when he knew all the words to “Turn Down For What,” said Sam Neus, 19, a fan. “But then “Brightside” goes on, and it has so many more words, and he was in there! He sang the whole thing! For all to hear! Astonishing.”

Several female dance floor participants preferred to stay anonymous but nonetheless confirmed that the performance had made Burnell factually the most eligible bachelor on campus. Especially impressive is that he even knows the words to the second verse. The Tiger is currently investigating a potential challenger, who is rumored to be bringing his mastery of “Sweet Caroline” to the dance floor this coming weekend to confront the current alpha male.

Are you an impostor at Princeton?

- How were your SAT scores?
 - So big, people didn't think it existed 'til recently!
 - Humble, but got the job done!
 - "Higher than my weight"
 - Nonexistent!
- What's your favourite M&M?
 - Blue! B. Red! C. Brown. D. Green!
- Political inclination?
 - Blue! B. Red! C. Absolute dictatorship. D. Green!
- Describe your everyday look!
 - A plain t-shirt and baggy pair of jeans!
 - Super-short skirt, oversized sweatshirt, and hoops!
 - Fully nude. Except for glasses, gloves, and heels.
 - Shorts and chunky sneakers!
- What do you love most in the world?
 - My friends! B. Myself! C. Power. D. Nature!
- How did you spend the summer?
 - Watching Netflix!
 - Working full-time at Goldman!
 - Being voiced by first black Miss America and Grammy-nominated Desperate Housewife star Vanessa Williams.
 - Babysitting Rashida Jones and Ezra Koenig's new baby!

- How would you describe yourself?
 - Fun! B. Organized! C. Sexy, sophisticated. D. Sweet!

Mostly A's: You're not an impostor, you're the flawed and forgivable heart of Princeton, the kinda student who makes other students happy to be here.

Mostly B's: Please never write a misogynistic and elitist novel whose promo will be published in journalistic gold in the New York Post.

Mostly C's: Yes, and the impostor that you are is the Brown M&M. Who do you think you're fooling, your skin bearing the same colour as your flesh? Is this some kind of sick joke to you? Or worse still, is your skin transparent, and all your organs on display? In fact, the only thing about you of which I'm sure is that you're a psychopathic sycophant setting the feminist movement back 50 years with your unrealistic body standards and "weight less than your IQ." You look brown but call yourself "peach" like some representation-baiting role cast for Taylor Lautner. You disgust me. Go straight to Jail.

Mostly D's: You're not an impostor, I think you might actually be Jeff Bezos' secret legacy child.

Taking on the Pre-Read

DOCTOR: "Which arm would you like your vaccine shot in? You may experience some soreness"

READER: "Well... I need my left hand to support the left side of the Pre-read"

DOCTOR: "So the right arm then?"

READER: "...but I also need my right hand to turn the Pre-read's pages"

DOCTOR: "..."

READER: "What about my tail?"

"Have you finished this year's Pre-read?"

Sir, this is an Arby's/Wawa/Wendy's.

"Have you finished this year's Pre-read?"

Almost, but I hate having to use Duo Mobile Authentication every time I start a new chapter.

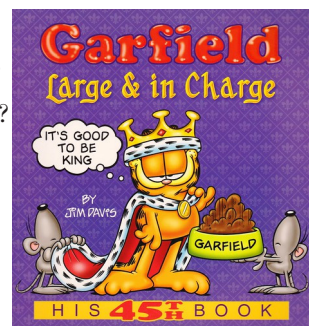

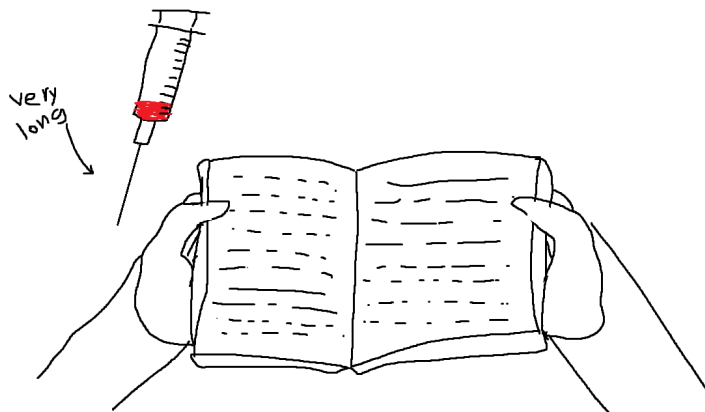

"Have you finished this year's Pre-read?"

No I'm trying to get a microfridge
(or, "No, I'm trying to get a microfridge since there isn't any AC in Holder)

((or, "No, I'm trying to get a microfridge since there isn't any AC in Holder. If I dislocate a couple ribs I'm pretty sure I can fit in 45 3/8" H x 19 5/8" W x 19 3/4" D))

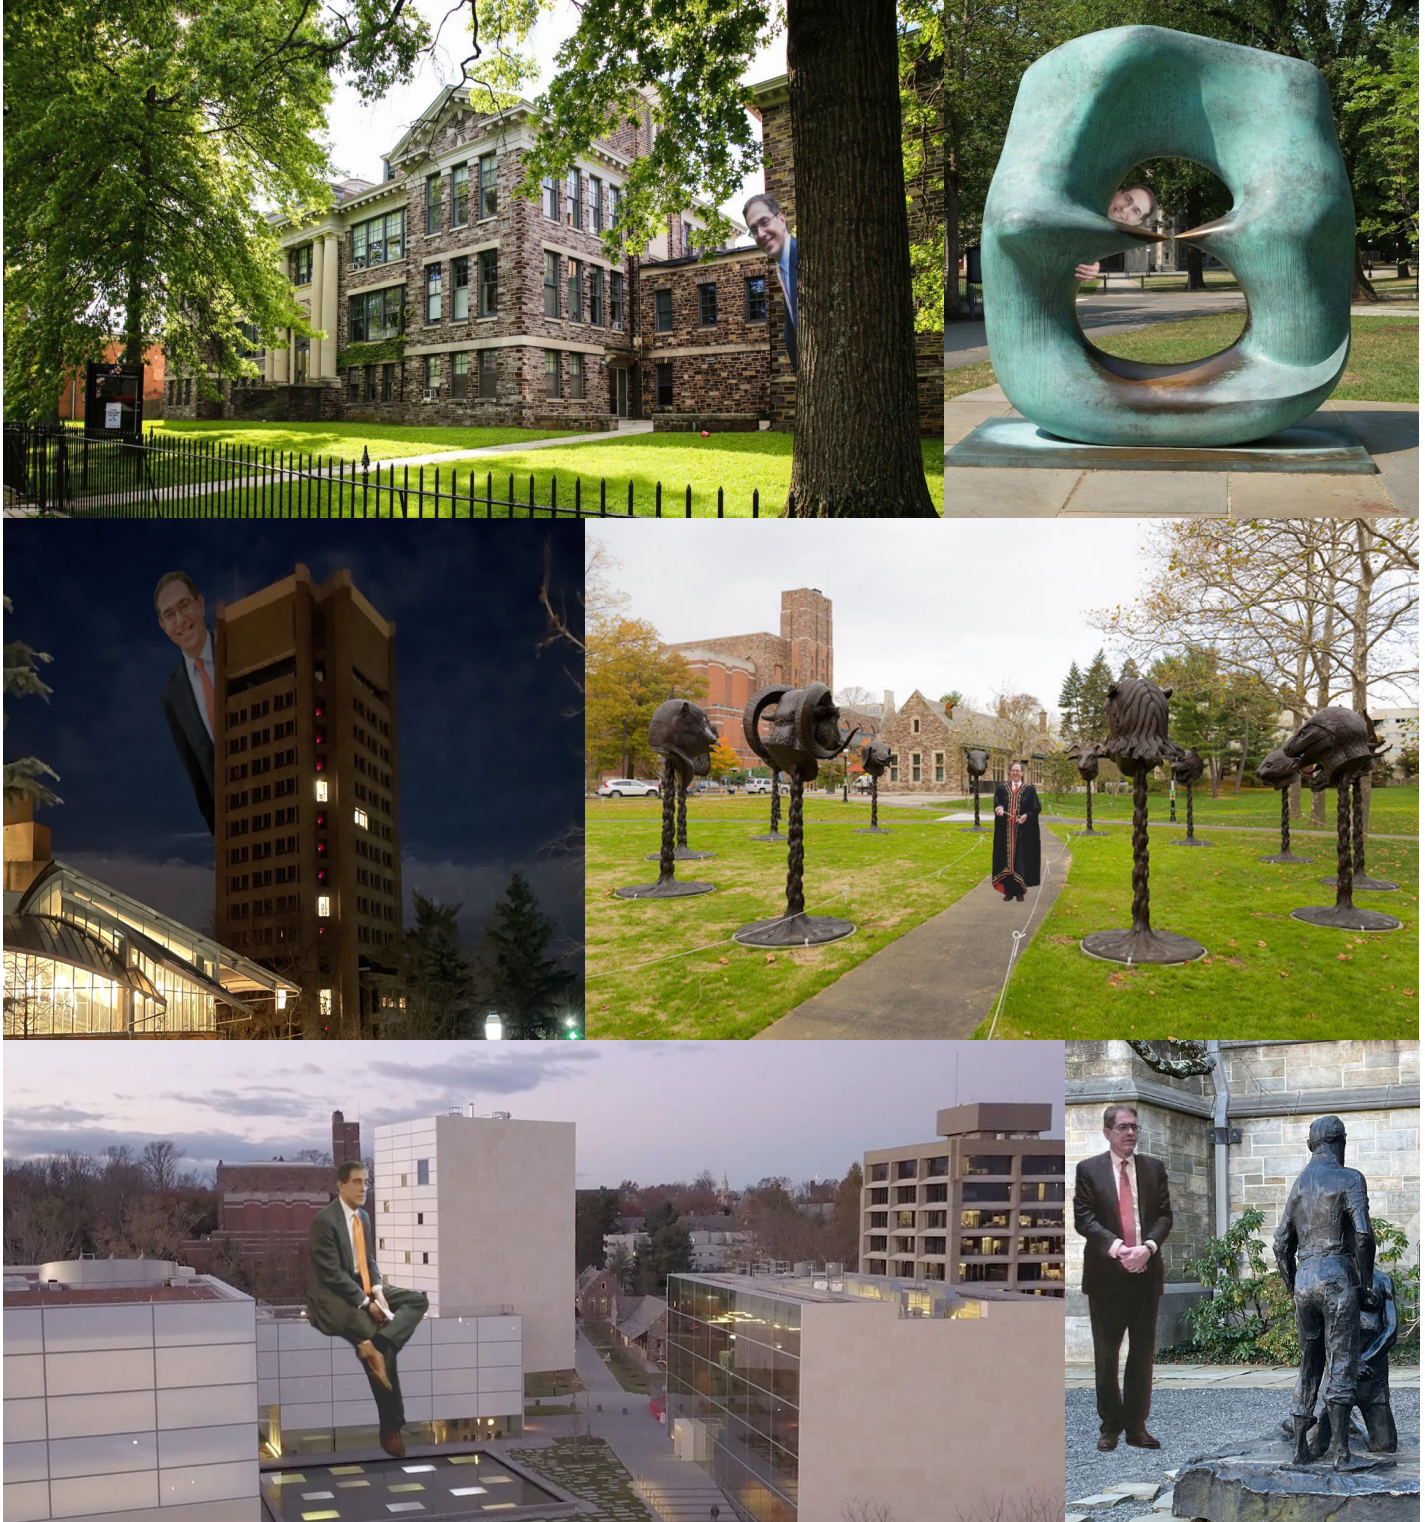

"Have you finished this year's Pre-read?"

Yeah, "Garfield Large & in Charge" right?

GRACE XU '22

UNDERCLASSMAN

Bloomberg Single, Butler

A stunning, wooden-floored, well lit room with a beautiful view of Poe field. 1bath/shower shared with neighbor. AC unit. Sounds nice, huh? You won't get this dorm.

Baker Basement Double, Whitman

How did you manage to get Whitman as your residential college and get stuck in a double? Loser. This cramped room comes with one tiny window, bunked beds, and a study across the hall. Because the desks don't fit in your miserable, squished room.

UPPERCLASSMAN

Cuyler Dorm

A lovely grey-scale room designed with grey stone, grey hallways, and a grey fireplace. Comes with unwanted roommates, and yes, by that I do mean cockroaches.

4th Floor Brown Quad

Cramped, barely 3-room dorm. More like 1 room and 2 half-rooms. This absolute steal of a room is equipped with a free daily exercise service since this hall does not come with an elevator. Good luck, LOL.

Dod Bilevel

Rare find, as the rest of Dod is pure garbage.

Spelman Dorms

A modern, I.M. Pei-designed building with horrifically dangerous staircases. Includes patio, 4 bedrooms, full kitchen, and AC unit. Gorgeous floor-to-ceiling windows where everyone can see everything you're doing. Please, for the love of God, close your blinds.

Scully Jack and Jill

Quiet, roomy dorm designed with the thinnest walls the construction workers could find. Free ambient noises provided as the flush of the 100 bathrooms can be heard at all hours of the day.

Patton/Wright Dorm

Average, by-the-numbers college dorm. Comes with a no-charge maze game as you attempt to find the laundry room on your first day.

The Slums, All of Them

Disgusting.

Campbell Quad, Rocky

This historic room comes with a bay window, boarded-up fireplace, and the occasional crapper. Make sure to check out your trash cans if you notice any strange smells.

1927 Quad, First

Spacious 2-bedroom, shared bathroom unit with no AC, who knows what style flooring, and a permanent air of mustiness. With its precious lack of common spaces, this dorm will prevent any rebellious thoughts you might have regarding protests. Will you look at this blinking light over here? Repeat after me: nothing bad happens at Princeton. Nothing bad happens at Princeton. All hail President Eisgruber. All hail President Eisgruber.

Annex Single, Forbes

A stunning... eh who am I kidding. This lovely asylum-looking unit comes with flying ant infestations, the occasional deer break-in, and daily views of your local beer-bellied white dads playing shitty golf.

Little Quad, Mathey

Roomy, semi-lit 2-bedroom unit with... grey? Rubber? Flooring? Don't ask. Amenities include proximity to gym and U-Store and very little else.

Chad's Single

Oh my Lord. Something has died here. That stain wasn't on the carpet yesterday? Jesus Christ. Do not look at the stain on the carpet. Do not smell the stain on the carpet.

Satisfy the language requirement in one academic year! Study German next summer in Munich!

► COMPLETE FOUR SEMESTERS OF GERMAN IN ONE ACADEMIC YEAR

Take GER 101 in Fall 21 and the double-credit GER 102-5 in Spring 22, and you can finish the requirement with GER 107-G next summer – a one-month, subsidized intensive course in Munich.

► FINISH THE REQUIREMENT IN THREE SEMESTERS + A MONTH IN MUNICH NEXT SUMMER

Take GER 101 in Fall 21 and GER 102 in Spring 22, followed by GER 105-G in Munich – and then GER 107 in Fall 22.

GER 101 Beginners German I

Have you ever wanted to read Kafka's Metamorphosis in the original language? Or Grimm's fairy tales? Or Nietzsche? Would you like to experience first-hand the cultural dynamics that produced Beethoven, BMW and Bayern-München?

GER 101 introduces you to German language and culture by way of an innovative curriculum developed at Princeton – and now adopted by numerous other Ivy League institutions – that emphasizes high-frequency vocabulary and communication-oriented classroom interaction. Using the language you learn, you'll discuss cultural issues such as social networks, the concept of Heimat, food cultures and urban spaces.

GER 102 Beginners German II

GER 102 expands your knowledge of German – and the cultures of Germany, Switzerland and Austria – by building on the curriculum of 101. You'll focus on topics ranging from diversity and borders to Weimar hyperinflation, Berlin night-life and fashion. With the high-frequency vocabulary you learn, you'll be able to read 70-75% of almost any contemporary media: newspapers, short stories, TV. And you'll gain the ability to have real conversations on these and other topics with native speakers – which will be perfect preparation for continuing your study of German next summer in Munich!

Please email the German Department at german@princeton.edu or Dr. Jamie Rankin at jrankin@princeton.edu with any questions.

Ten Things Every Go-Getting Princeton Freshman Should Know

Congratulations on making it through orientation! As you know, Princeton life is nothing like the high school life you're leaving behind, where you were the top dog in your class and where you very likely had the best ass. Here at Old Nassau, you're back at the bottom of the totem pole, aiming for the top. Here's ten things YOU can do to jumpstart your climb up.

1. Go to a different school

Nothing shows you're more serious about your GPA than leaving Princeton after one day of classes and transferring somewhere else. God knows you aren't going to find academic success here.

2. Don't use the Lord's name in vain:

Eisgruber 20:7: Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. I know I just did it in number one, but I'm already a lost cause.

3. Try not to be like your disgusting, drunk Uncle Jack

Don't be like your old, raggedy uncle who's wasted by 3:00 PM every day. All his best years are behind him, and he regrets everything. He's too old to change. He doesn't even know you're in the room damn it, just let him wallow in his own filth.

4. Don't Trust the T in Wright 403

We all know that the freshmen are the most eager to party, but for the love of all things holy don't trust the T in Wright 403. God. Just don't, ok? Promise me. PROMISE ME!

5. Write for the Princeton Tiger Magazine

Once I started writing for the Tiger, my GPA shot up, I landed 15 babes, and my dad welcomed me back into the family. What more could you want?

6. Lick every toilet seat you find

Princeton students notoriously leave a lot of "luggage" on toilet seats. If you want to get a mere fraction of their brain power, make sure to slobber up all the goop and poop that we Princetonians leave behind. That includes your own!

7. Only french kiss your professor while stripping after class ends

You should make sure to resist the temptation of sloppily making out with your CHM 202 professor while sexily ripping your clothes off until after class ends, so as not to interrupt their lecture. Your classmates will thank you!

8. Discuss your course load with your advisor

Yeah, seven courses your first semester is a great idea! Why not just chop your own genitalia off while you're at it? The academic stress will make you infertile, anyway.

9. Fall down the steps frequently

One of the best ways to show you're serious about success is to tumble down the stairs, knees first, whenever another Princetonian is nearby. This shows that you're serious about getting the hard work done, but also want to have fun.

10. Constantly compare yourself to everyone and everything

Your cousin Fitzgerald is a straight A student and already has an internship at Goldman Sachs. How come you aren't like that? It's ok, I understand that you're "burnt out." Doesn't seem like Fitzgerald ever gets burnt out, but I guess we can't all be as accomplished as him. I'm sure you'll be happy in the circus, though! I heard they were looking for a chimpanzee to do tricks.

Good luck Freshman!

"BEST FOUR YEARS OF MY LIFE"

Which Career Is For You? Take This Quiz!

1. What matters most to you in life?

- (a) Making money and being important
- (b) I don't really know.
- (c) Changing the world for the better
- (d) Having enough time to do things I like, like Pilates

2. What's your idea of a perfect first date?

- (a) Drinks while comparing our five-year-plans
- (b) Maybe dinner or something fun like an arcade or ice-skating. Or maybe just staying home and watching a movie. Honestly there are so many great first date ideas.
- (c) Volunteering together at the local animal shelter or at a beach cleanup. It's a great way to bond and talk about our aspirations.
- (d) Let them take me out to a five star restaurant and choose the most expensive item on the menu. Maybe if they're lucky they can take me back to their place.

3. If no one was there to catch you, would you run a red light?

- (a) Yes. I'd do it even if someone was there.
- (b) I don't think so. Actually, maybe if it was an emergency? I mean, if there's no other cars there, I wouldn't be putting anyone in danger, right? Wait but what if there was a hidden police camera...
- (c) That's a more nuanced question than you might think. What if taking that red light could save a family in the backseat of your car that you're saving from their burning home, and you're trying to get as far away from the fire as possible. It would be a moral necessity in that case.
- (d) I would never be the one driving, so that would be a question to ask my partner or the chauffeur.

7. What's your favorite color?

- (a) Green
- (b) I don't have one
- (c) Rainbow
- (d) Shiny

4. Do you want to have kids?

- (a) Not until at least my 30's. Work comes first. I didn't go to Princeton to be held back by some little obnoxious, blood-sucking, tit-squeezing, big-eyed extortionists.
- (b) On the one hand I love my kids. But what kind of world am I bringing a child into? I don't know if that's the right thing to do for my future children. Would I be a good parent?
- (c) Yes! I love kids. It's always been my dream to adopt. There are so many children in need of loving families, and it would be my privilege to give them a wonderful home.
- (d) I think that's a good way to secure a marriage, certainly. I don't really have a liking for children, but we'll find a nanny that will.

5. If you could have any superpower, what would it be?

- (a) To read people's minds or travel into the future. Whatever's more expedient.
- (b) I've always wanted to be able to fly, so that would be cool. I am kind of afraid of heights though. I wonder how safe it would be. I'm sure it would be fine though. Right?
- (c) I think it would be amazing to have a magic touch that would provide a lifeblood to anyone or anything graced by my healing touch. A dry and barren soil made fertile and wet by my finger. A foot tarnished by warts, fungus, and ungodly odor that no amount of soap can mask, transformed into Dan Schneider's wildest fantasies and wettest dreams.
- (d) At the snap of my fingers my Zumba instructor appears in my living room

6. How do you deal with setbacks?

- (a) I write them in my notes app to use in future inspirational LinkedIn posts.
- (b) I can be pretty resilient sometimes, but I can also be kind of weak. Like for example, when my cat died, I wasn't fazed at all, but when I went to the grocery store and saw that someone had taken all of the bananas, which were on sale, mind you, I collapsed to the ground in a puddle of tears and stayed there until an employee informed me that there have never been bananas in the dairy aisle and that I needed to leave.

- (c) I've learned to embrace challenges and setbacks as a part of life. I persevere and do my best to overcome any obstacles keeping me from achieving my dreams.
- (d) Divorce

Results:

If you answered mostly a's: Based on your interests and priorities, you are meant to be a consultant.

If you answered mostly b's: You are very indecisive, confused, and frankly, directionless. And that is exactly why you'll get a job in consulting. In the end, you're not principled or courageous enough to do anything else. Maybe you didn't think you'd spend the rest of your life discussing the peaks and troughs of the market, but at least you'll do so well dressed.

If you answered mostly c's: You did it! You don't care about materialism AND have the spirit required for the life of selfless, thankless drudgery you feel destined to live. You're still going to be a consultant though. That studio apartment and vegan organic diet aren't going to pay for themselves.

If you answered mostly d's: You've always dreamed of the stay-at-home life. We get it. Work is hard and a rich spouse is the key to an easy life of luxury. Unfortunately, they're going to divorce you. And you should've read more carefully before you signed the prenup. Now you need a job that'll pay for your growing exotic cat collection. You are going to be a consultant.
