

Teaching for mastery through practical realistic differentiation:

Making student learning stick for all

Touchpoints:

1. Engage critically with the latest research on outcomes for students.
2. Discover how to create a deep learning curriculum and mastery culture in your school.
3. Ensure every pupil remains in their "Challenge Sweet Spot" through classwork that meets individual needs.
4. Empower low attainers while stretching high attainers even further and eliminating the fear of being 'stuck'.
5. Deploy mastery learning either as an occasional or additional teaching strategy for longer programmes of study and particularly challenging topics or concepts.
6. Identify where intervention is necessary and adapting your teaching to pupils' emerging needs.
7. Support less confident learners by building their self-esteem and motivation.
8. Ensure your TA has a measurable impact.
9. Help ALL pupils make progress in your lessons while minimising preparation and planning.

Who is it for?

- Teachers
- Teaching Assistants

What will it do?

Great teachers cater for the needs of everyone. Yet differentiation is one of education's hardest elements to implement, achievable only by adopting specific teaching techniques that embed a deep learning curriculum in the classroom. This is the route to mastery learning, which the Educational Endowment Foundation finds leads on average to an additional five months' progress over the course of a school year compared to traditional approaches.

This training will equip you with the practical skills required to meet the demands of the ablest learners as well as maximise the progress of SEND and EAL pupils. So, not only will you acquire much greater understanding of individual learning needs, but you will discover how to create a culture of independence and which resources to use to optimise your time without compromising learning.

By applying exciting, low-prep techniques that lead to mastery learning, you will be able to tactfully challenge each pupil at an appropriate level, without resorting to numerous different lesson resources or time-consuming micro-tutorials.
